Health campaign takes to air, road

Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — President Clinton took to the airwaves Thursday with paid advertisements and members of his Cabinet hit the road with news interviews as the administration began an all-out effort to lobby for passage of health reform.

But as has been true for weeks, the tangled politics of Capitol Hill rendered the administration vague about precisely what bill he was seeking support for.

With at least two differing proposals being offered by the Democratic leadership

Washington rallies — A6

— one by House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., the other by Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, — Clinton carefully avoided any specific piece of legislation in his television advertisements. Instead, he urged support only for "the new health-care approach that will be voted on soon."

"Whose plan passes is not important," Clinton said in the advertisement, which aired on CNN. "What is important is that you have guaranteed private health insurance that can never be taken away."

At the White House, press secretary Dee Dee Myers said Clinton was airing his advertisements in an effort "to speak directly to the American people. There's been an incredible amount of information and misinformation around the issue of health care over the months. More money has been spent on this issue than on any other issue of public policy perhaps in history."

Democratic strategists hope to air the two-minute ads on CNN every night until the Senate begins voting on health care.

The move is unusual — presidents routinely air advertisements during their reelection campaigns, but not to urge support for their programs.

The spots will be aired on CNN at 5:50 p.m. MDT.

Whose bill passes is, however, highly important to the members of Congress who have to vote on them.

In the House, many Democrats are nervous about voting for Gephardt's bill's requiring that all companies insure their workers unless the Senate does so as well.

Computer will iron out bus routes

By Brad Bowlin
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — The school district is going high tech to iron out one of its most basic problems — how to get kids to school on time.

Faced with new elementary school boundaries, a shifting population and a new school bus company, the district bought a new computer system to help match kids with bus stops.

"We're asking the public for some patience," while district employees work out the kinks, said Dayt Simcoe, who is in charge of transportation for the district.

All summer, they have been typing names and addresses into a computer. About 3,300 students ride the bus to school in Twin Falls, Simcoe said.

With the new computer system, district officials can pinpoint any student's address, and tell at a glance where that child should catch the bus.

A map of the city appears on the dark computer screen. With a couple of keystrokes, all bus stops for a particular school are highlighted.

The operator chooses one of the stops, and names of all nearby students, who will use that stop, flash onto the screen.

The computer will help the district make its estimated 35 bus routes more efficient, cutting down on fuel costs and time, Simcoe said.

Better mail service will take year, postal chief says

Runyon

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Postmaster General Marvin Runyon predicted it will take a year to get the nation's mail delivery back up to speed and said some of the underlying problems might take five years to fix.

But he promised angry members of Congress Thursday that delivery in the Washington area, recently tied with New York for slowest in the nation, would see "continuous improvement over the next few weeks and months."

Seventy-five new mail carriers will be hired in Washington, postal officials said. And the city will get the intense attention Chicago has received since mail complaints surfaced there last winter, Runyon said.

House Post Office Committee members at the subcommittee hearing repeatedly asked how things had gotten so bad.

They cited Postal Service studies that found delivery last winter was the slowest since quarterly surveys began in 1990. And they noted that postal inspectors found millions of pieces of mail backlogged at three Washington-area post offices in May.

"The problem is massive. I think to some degree the scope of it is unprecedented," said Rep. Frank McCloskey, D-Ind. "Whatever is happening, there is no excuse for it."

Runyon blamed the nation's delivery problems on the bureaucratic "culture" of the Postal Service and workers' resistance to his attempts to modernize the system since taking office two years ago.

Several committee members voiced frustration with Runyon's failure to give more concrete explanations of what went wrong.

"There has been a change and it has not been a change for the good," said Rep. Gary Ackerman, D-N.Y. "What has happened to make it worse?"

When Runyon again began talking about human nature and resistance to change, Ackerman said he would give up the line of questioning as futile.

Ackerman suggested the problems began with the loss of too many experienced workers when the Postal Service offered early retirement incentives in 1992. He also cited low worker morale.

Pentagon, DOE wrestle over arms

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The end of the Cold War is making new enemies of old friends in the U.S. government.

It is doing so by provoking an increasingly visible feud between top officials of the Defense and Energy departments over management of the U.S. nuclear weapons stockpile.

After years of working hand-in-hand to build and test the world's most powerful arsenal, the two departments are at odds over how the government should spend the dwindling resources it devotes to nuclear arms.

The feud reflects in part an ideological dispute over the role such arms should have in future national security policy, now that they have fallen from the pedestal such weapons occupied since 1945. But it also reflects sharp differences in operating style at the top of the two agencies.

Bearing witness brings an end to nightmares of sister's death

The Associated Press

LAFAYETTE, Ind. — Tormented by nightmares in which she saw the pleading face of her long-dead little sister, Margarita Booth came forward after nearly 25 years and accused her own mother of killing the toddler.

Last week, Booth's mother, Anita Vega, was convicted of involuntary manslaughter, and the rest of the family has ostracized Booth.

"It's hard to think of her sleeping on a metal bed, not being able to come and go as she pleases," Booth said of her mother Wednesday. "But at the same time, just because she's my mom doesn't mean she has the right to pick and choose when someone dies. And just because she's my mom doesn't mean she shouldn't be punished."

Booth, now a 33-year-old homemaker, told a jury she saw her mother kill Anna Marie Arguello in their Frankfort home in 1969 by beating the 2-year-old and forcing her to stay in a cold bath all day. The child was being punished for bedwetting.

Booth said she saw her now-dead stepfather, Luis Vega, take Anna Marie's body away bundled in a blanket. She never saw the blanket or her sister again.

Booth didn't go to police until 1992. She said she finally decided to come forward because of recurring nightmares in which she would see "close-up shots of Anna Marie's face, pleading with me."

"My purpose in telling was to make the nightmares go away and to fulfill a promise I had made to my sister when I had witnessed her death," she said. "That promise was someday I would go and find her and bring her back to give her a real burial."

Coming forward, she said, "was very hard for me because it was going against everything that had been totally ingrained in me from the time I was a child, and that was, 'Don't tell.'"

The price for telling would be death, and I knew that."

Without Booth's testimony, authorities had little to go on.

Ms. Vega, 52, claimed the toddler died a natural death and that her body was secretly buried by the father because he feared deportation to Mexico.

No body was ever found, and the only evidence investigators could find that Anna Marie even existed was a birth certificate Booth obtained from Michigan, where the child was born, and a picture of the toddler from an aunt in Ohio.

"Margarita is a very believable person," Prosecutor Louis Evans said. "From the outset, her only goal has been to find the body of her sister. She's not a vindictive person or a lunatic. She's as much a victim as her sister." She is living with the guilt for 25 years.

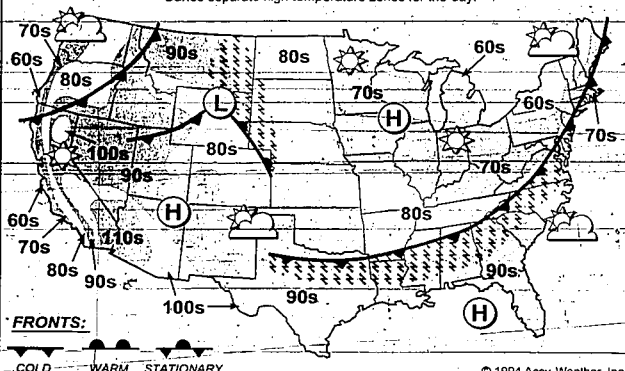

At Ms. Vega's trial, the defense attacked Booth's credibility by pointing out inconsistencies between her statements in court and in her testimony before a grand jury.

Heat continues sweaty grip on West but some areas cool off

The Associated Press

An air mass from Canada cooled the north-central states Thursday and spawned thunderstorms from Pennsylvania to southern New England but triple-digit heat continued in the West.

Afternoon thunderstorms erupted along and south of the cold front from sections of Missouri northeast across the Ohio Valley and New York. Some of these storms produced severe weather and heavy rainfall.

Severe thunderstorm watches were posted in parts of Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania; New York; West Virginia; Missouri, Illinois, Kentucky and along Lake Erie and Lake Ontario.

In the Northwest, a slow-moving low pressure system generated thunderstorms and rains across much of the region. Many of the storms produced little more than wind

Weather summary

The Gem State was dominated Thursday by a ridge of high pressure aloft that helped to produce mostly sunny skies. Once again temperatures reached the 90s or higher across much of the state.

A low pressure area off the northwest coast was forecast to move into the region, which would help cool the state's high temperatures. A few showers should also accompany the passage of the Pacific upper-level low.

Temperatures at mid-altitudes ranged from 90s in the south to the mid-80s to mid-90s in the north.

The highest temperature in the state Thursday was 102 degrees at Emmett and Pocatello. Ketchikan reported the lowest at 40 degrees.

Elsewhere in the nation Thursday, the highest temperature was 120 degrees at Death Valley, Calif. Truckee, Calif., reported the lowest temperature at 34 degrees.

and lightning, which has ignited scores of forest fires in eight states since July 24.

Seasonal heat and humidity in the Gulf Coast region caused scattered showers and thunderstorms.

In North Carolina, a thunderstorm dropped dime-size hail at New Bern.

Rainfall totals for the 24 hour period ended at 6 a.m. MDT included 2.17 inches at Kirtland, Mo.; 2.15 at Norfolk, Neb.; 1.54 at Park Falls, Wis.; 1.4 at Sioux City, Iowa; and 1.3 in Madison, Wis.

Overnight lows remained rather warm, with the mercury dipping into the 70s across the South and into the middle Atlantic coastal areas. The West had morning temperatures in normal 70 to 80 degree range. It only cooled in the extreme North due to the cold mass from Canada.

The morning low was 42 degrees at West Yellowstone, Mont.

Since then, O'Leary has demonstrated some reluctance to commit billions of additional dollars for the maintenance of a sizable U.S. nuclear arsenal. She also has argued in favor of much greater openness about nuclear matters long considered vital U.S. secrets, including the current number of U.S. nuclear weapons.

On the other side is a cadre of military officers and Pentagon officials led by Deputy Secretary of Defense John M. Deutch, a prominent chemist from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and card-carrying member of the defense and nuclear establishments now struggling to adapt to new financial and political realities.

Although a ban on nuclear tests has become highly popular on Capitol Hill, Deutch has pressed for a continuation of small-scale nuclear tests and wants the Energy Department to invest immediately in a new facility to produce tritium, a key nuclear weapons ingredient, on the assumption that the U.S. arsenal will not go much lower than current projected levels.

Deutch also has recently fought more openness on nuclear matters until Russia makes public more data on its nuclear program. His aides have complained bitterly that O'Leary's disclosures of U.S. Cold War sins are unfairly blackening a history of nuclear weapons achievements.

The feud now centers on a benign-sounding concept: nuclear "stockpile stewardship." But it involves nuclear weapons programs at Energy worth an estimated $1.7 billion annually and proposals to spend hundreds of millions of dollars more on new facilities for testing nuclear weapons components or on experiments that produce small nuclear explosions.

After months of back-room skirmishing between mid-level officials, the disagreement became highly public when Deutch recently lobbed the equivalent of a megaton-sized weapon. In a letter to O'Leary that was delivered last month in the Los Angeles Times, Deutch questioned whether the Energy Department was allocating enough money to the weapons program "to maintain the technological capability that is required for future nuclear weapons missions."

In bureaucratic language, that amounts to accusing the Energy Department of cutting corners on national security. The letter got Energy's attention largely because it seemed to be laying the groundwork for a more broadly based challenge by the Pentagon to DOE's longstanding custodial responsibility for nuclear arms.

Energy Department officials had

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti (AP) — Authorities deported an American TV crew Thursday, putting the three in an open pickup truck, parading them through the capital and dumping them at the Dominican border.

Soldiers detained the free-lance journalists for PBS' "The MacNeil/Lehrer News Sunday," while they were filming at Port-au-Prince's airport. Three of their videotapes were seized.

The Americans — Elizabeth Farnsworth, John Knapp and Jaime Kibben — were freed later Sunday, but their Haitian driver and a translator remained imprisoned.

Points of controversy

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Energy Secretary Hazel R. O'Leary has upset the Defense Department over several issues:

- She made public thousands of pages of previously classified information about nuclear weapons production and testing, and disclosed 206 secret underground nuclear blasts. She volunteered that the government should pay compensation to the victims of radiation experiments performed decades ago.

- She surprised the Pentagon by signing an agreement that would allow Russian inspectors to visit the U.S. plutonium storage facility near Amarillo, Tex., where nuclear weapons are assembled or pulled apart.
- She refused to support the Navy's request for an exemption from the Clean Water Act for naval nuclear fuel facilities in New York and Idaho.

And perhaps most crucial, she argued forcefully and successfully in the administration for extending the U.S. moratorium on nuclear weapons testing. In so doing, she rejected the claim of many Pentagon officials and weapons scientists—including Deutch—that after 1,054 nuclear tests, more such blasts are needed to evaluate the safety of weapons in the stockpile.

Having lost this battle, the Pentagon now wants approval for scientific experiments that produce very small nuclear explosions. But O'Leary, whose department controls the Nevada Test Site, has challenged the request as well, and the dispute is headed for resolution by President Clinton.

O'Leary's assignment is "responsible stewardship" of the nuclear stockpile, "a lot of people here think she is now responsible steward."

O'Leary's policies have made her immensely popular with environmental groups, weapons plant watchdogs or neighbors and members of Congress who long have criticized the department as an isolated outpost of Cold War fervor. But the same qualities — her penchant for openness, insistence on according environmental concerns equal weight with national security, and refusal to be deferential to the military brass — were destined to mix uncomfortably with the traditional secrecy and self-protectiveness of the Pentagon and the weapons laboratories.

O'Leary's style often irritates military people. One of her first acts as secretary was to order the photos of nuclear warships removed from the corridor to her office, replacing them with pictures of environmentally correct energy sources such as wind farms.

O'Leary said all decisions about the nuclear weapons budget have been approved through an interagency process and described herself as "very comfortable with each decision made."

However, a research paper released this month by the Congressional Budget Office noted that the Energy Department's "planned levels of funding are not likely to be sufficient" for its "rather ambitious technical agenda for ensuring the continued reliability, safety, security, and flexibility of the U.S. nuclear arsenal."

coc said. The district hopes it can eliminate a few routes entirely.

In addition, the computerized database will help district officials know exactly who is on which bus in case of an accident or a route change, Simcoe said.

But first, Simcoe and his staff must figure out the best way to get every student to school. That task is made more difficult this year, because the addition of Oregon Trail Elementary will send about 800 elementary students to different schools.

Simcoe said he hopes the new routes will be determined within two weeks.

The $28,500 program from Educational Logistics of Missouri, Mo., helps the school district rework elementary school boundaries earlier this year.

The system costs an additional $2,920 each year for maintenance and licensing, but much of the cost is picked up by the state, which subsidizes district transportation expenses.

The state reimbursed the district for $23,000 of the initial cost, plus $1,650 of the annual fee.

Once developed, the bus routes likely will be handled by a new company this year. An Oregon firm with contracts in several school districts is bidding to take over from D Bus Co., Simcoe said.

The school board will consider the proposal at its Aug. 9 meeting.

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — Hillary Rodham Clinton spent a lot of time last winter worrying about Whitewater, but she wasn't "paralyzed" by the controversy, her chief of staff told the Senate Banking Committee Thursday.

The debate over just how worried the first lady was about Whitewater offered a measure of just how grim the political warfare over the controversy has become.

Replicans on the committee spent long hours attempting to cast shadows on the Clintons. Whitewater conduct, following paths of logic that appeared ever more obscure.

And White House staffers spent the same marathon hours attempting to prove that Whitewater was no big deal.

Margaret Ann Williams, Hillary Clinton's chief of staff, conceded that the first lady was "distracted" last winter by mounting press reports about Whitewater, and spent time with her private lawyer reconstructing the record of her family's investment in Whitewater, an Ozark vacation-home development.

But Williams disputed a diary entry by Deputy Treasury Secretary Roger Altman, quoting her as saying that Clinton was "paralyzed" with concern about the press' interest in Whitewater. Williams said she did not recall having such a discussion with Altman and, in any case, would not have any information about Clinton's mood.

"I would not have said Mrs. Clinton was paralyzed," Williams said. "One, it wasn't true ... and secondly, I wouldn't discuss her state of mind with anyone."

Indeed, Williams said, despite the time consumed with her lawyer and the distractions involved, Clinton was maintaining a heavy schedule from December through February, not only in putting together the health bill but in many other tasks.

"Paralyzed would be far from the word one would use to describe her," Williams said. At the same time, Williams acknowledged that Clinton was worried about the issue — for good reason.

"It would be unusual for a person who was getting beaten up every day in the press and having to spend so much time with her lawyer trying to remember things that happened 17 years ago, for that person not to be concerned," Williams said.

Williams insisted under persistent questioning from Sens. Phil

Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, ranking Republican on the Senate Banking Committee, speaks during a Thursday hearing on the Whitewater affair before the committee on Capitol Hill.

Gramm, R-Texas, and Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., that she could not recall talking with Altman about Clinton's state of mind. But she admitted she "had been saying to anyone who would listen that Whitewater was distracting."

Gramm said he tended to "give credence to diaries because people write them from the heart and assume that nobody else will ever see them." Thus, he concluded, a diarist would have no reason to lie to his diary.

Just how Altman's diary entry or Clinton's state of mind related to any Whitewater legal or ethical question was not clear.

What is clear is that Altman, the number two man at the Treasury Department and a college friend of President Clinton, is in serious danger of losing his job for Whitewater missteps.

Many committee members, including some Democrats, believe Altman lied to them in testimony on Feb. 24 about his role in informing the White House about a Treasury Department criminal investigation related to Whitewater.

Altman testified that only one meeting about the case had occurred between White House and Treasury officials. Actually, there had been at least four formal meetings and countless phone calls and conversations by the time of the hearing.

In other testimony Thursday, four high-ranking White House aides defended their efforts to limit the damage from leaks about the investigation and detailed efforts to correct Altman's testimony.

John D. Podesta, the White House staff secretary, said he was assigned to coordinate the effort and thought Altman had dealt with the errors in two letters to the committee.

But both Democratic and Republican committee members said Altman had not been responsive.

Sen. Richard Bryan, D-Nev., said the White House "dropped the ball" in following up with Altman to ensure that he corrected the record.

A number of committee members, including Democrat Richard Shelby of Alabama, have urged Altman to resign. And committee chairman Doh Riggie, D-Mich., has said the committee would have a hard time in the future trusting Altman's testimony.

Both the Senate and House banking committees have been holding hearings this week on White House Treasury Department contacts stemming from an investigation by the Resolution Trust Corp. of the bankrupt Madison Guaranty Savings and Loan, an Arkansas firm.

Madison's president, James McDougal, was a friend and business partner of the Clintons in the Whitewater venture, which also was a financial failure.

RTC investigators in Kansas City recommended to RTC officials that Altman be removed from the investigation. The Justice Department took into account possible criminal violations in the Madison case — including whether the S&L made an improper loan to Whitewater and pumped some money into then-Gov. Clinton's gubernatorial campaign. The president and Hillary Clinton were said to be named, apparently as witnesses, in one of the criminal referrals.

When the referrals reached Washington, Treasury Counsel Jean Hanrahan informed that the media already had gotten wind of them — notified White House officials about the inquiries.

Several senators have said this amounted to giving the president advance warning about a criminal case in which he might have been involved — and could have given him the opportunity to take steps to head off the investigation or cover his tracks.

In lengthy testimony this week, however, no evidence has been unearthed suggesting that anyone in the White House or Treasury tried to interfere in the investigation. The referrals reportedly went to the Justice Department last October.

An investigation of the White House-Treasury contacts by Whitewater independent prosecutor Robert B. Fiske Jr. concluded that no laws had been broken. And an analysis by the independent Office of Government Ethics indicated no ethical rules had been breached.

But skeptical congressional Drug-related violence increases intimidation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Crime witnesses are increasing along with drug-related violence, lawmakers said Thursday as they examined witness protection programs at a hearing.

Rep. Charles B. Schumer, D-N.Y., chairman of the House Judiciary subcommittee on crime, said witness intimidation has "exploded like a bloody supernova."

"It threatens the integrity of our criminal justice system," he said. "When thugs control the courthouse, they control the law; they control the streets."

In a recent case in Washington, police said nine people were murdered by a drug gang apparently because they might be witnesses.

An estimated 30 to 35 percent of murder cases in Washington cannot be successfully prosecuted because of witnesses' fear of cooperating, said J. Ralshay Johnson, an assistant U.S. attorney in Washington.

Testifying at the hearing were Dorothy Pugh of Fort Washington, Pa., and a woman from New York City identified only as "Jane Doe," both of whom have testified in murder cases and had to move after they were threatened.

"When I go outside, I get scared ... Where I'm living now, nobody knows me," said "Jane Doe," wearing a flowered kerchief around her head and large sunglasses to hide most of her face.

She has testified in three trials against Raymond Vargas, who is serving 25 years to life for the murder of a 14-year-old girl whom he had sexually and physically abused and then burned her body. Vargas's brother Hector has pleaded guilty to threatening "Jane Doe" as a witness, and has received five years' probation.

Pugh's apartment was fire-bombed by the teen-aged Merriweather triplets, said Beverly Woodard, who prosecuted the case. The February 1993 incident killed a sleeping 1-year-old girl who was in Pugh's care.

The fire, which destroyed the entire building and left 40 families homeless, was a warning to her not to testify against two of the triplets, whom she had seen shoot and rob a cabdriver, Pugh said.

Pugh has testified in four trials.

Howard Stern pulls out of governor's race

NEW YORK (AP) — Good news, felons.

There'll be no shocks from the shock jock. Howard Stern, who promised to bring back the electric chair if elected governor, has thrown the switch on his political career.

The runcy radio personality quit Thursday rather than disclose his personal finances, as required of candidates.

"But I will run for pope," he said. It was typical Stern shuck — an on-air news conference in which the self-styled "King of All Media" spent half an hour insulting opponents, especially Gov. Mario Cuomo, — and bantering with reporters.

He said his contracts with Infinity Broadcasting, a TV company and a film company "all prohibit me from discussing financial terms in any form."

The decision to quit was forced on him, Stern said, when a judge refused to exempt him from the law requiring all candidates to file financial disclosure reports.

"I was not for that, Stern insisted. "I would have won the election. I would be the next governor of New York."

No show for Stones — again

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was who didn't visit the White House on Thursday that attracted all the interest.

Photographers staked out entrances hoping to catch a glimpse of the Rolling Stones as rumors swirled for a third straight day of a possible White House visit.

A sign in the press area that states "No Tours Beyond This Point" was amended with this hopeful addition: "Except Rolling Stones."

But press secretary Dee Dee Myers began her daily press briefing with this sad announcement:

"I don't mean to discourage all of you rock 'n' roll fans, but none of the members of the band were with the entourage today. Mr. Jagger and others were not here."

FDA looks to regulate more food

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Food and Drug Administration is looking for the next food to regulate under a new law to enhance food safety by tracking it from harvest to the dinner table.

The seafood industry was the first to fall under the new program that aims to prevent food contamination instead of just reacting to it.

The Agriculture Department plans to put meat and poultry under the program, called Hazard Analysis Critical Control Points, or HACCP, as well.

Thursday, FDA asked the public and industry to help it decide what foods to regulate next.

"This system... though it is simple and based on common sense, is one of the broadest food safety policy shifts in the last 50 years," said FDA Commissioner David Kessler.

About 9,000 Americans die every year from food poisoning, and thousands more get sick. Yet FDA has fewer than 1,000 inspectors, who visit 50,000 food plants.

The program is supposed to prevent contamination by requiring companies to prepare an intensive safety plan and keep strict records to ensure foods are properly handled at each step on their way to the dinner plate.

Because 30,000 to 60,000 Americans get sick from tainted seafood each year, that industry was the first selected for the new program.

The regulations will be adapted to fit each industry. For example, seafood must be tested for pollution, a factor that has no bearing on many other foods. Some foods need less oversight — fresh fruit, for example, has less potential for contamination than, say, frozen dinners with lots of ingredients.

FDA will accept comments until December about which foods most need regulation, and should decide the next target by next fall.

Universal coverage advocates fight tide

WASHINGTON (AP) — From an air-conditioned news conference in the Capitol to a rally on the summer-baked steps outside, advocates of universal coverage struggled Thursday to reverse the tide in Congress' health reform debate.

On the morning after President Clinton spoke warmly of a plan for 95 percent coverage, five liberal Democratic senators issued a letter insisting "action must be taken to reach 100 percent coverage... or 12 to 14 million Americans will remain uninsured."

"Our votes are not to be taken for granted," said Sen. Paul Wellstone, D-Minnesota, at a news conference where he and his colleagues faulted the reform measure advanced on Tuesday by Majority Leader George Mitchell.

Other Democratic advocates of universal coverage, including Jay Byrnes of West Virginia and Tom Daschle of South Dakota, indicated they could support Mitchell's measure if their efforts to expand coverage through amendments failed.

At mid-day, in the shadow of the Capitol, a small group of senators for a government-financed health plan for all Americans, modeled on the Canadian system. "Ninety-five percent isn't 100 percent," they shouted.

On the Capitol steps, Vice President Al Gore and some lawmakers greeted the "Health Security Express" bus riders who were carrying their cross-country crusade for coverage for all Americans.

While the crowd boomed every mention of Senate GOP leader Bob Dole, Clinton favors less-sweeping reform measures. Clinton Auto Workers President Owen Bieber vowed that the backers of health reform would overcome the "nay-sayers, obstructionists and social dinosaurs."

Clinton personally helped inaugurate a fresh lobbying push. From the Oval Office, he began a series of paid television appearances asking viewers to help "make this historic decision based on facts not fear."

The drift in congressional reform efforts was unmistakably away from Clinton's original call for coverage for all.

In the Senate, Mitchell's bill relies on federal subsidies and insurance law changes to expand coverage to 95 percent by the end of the decade. A mandatory business contribution might take effect in 2002, but only if national coverage fell short of 95 percent and then only for 50 percent of the cost of insurance. Firms with less than 25 employees would be exempt.

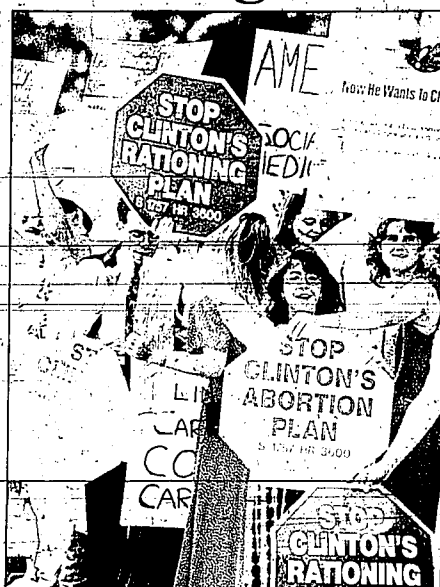

At a news conference Wednesday night, Clinton said he would sign the bill if it cleared Congress. Last January, he vowed to veto any bill that didn't provide guaranteed insurance for every American that couldn't never be taken away."

For his part, Dole said he thought Clinton gave "short shrift" to the House measure at his news conference. "I sort of got the hint last night that maybe Clinton was leaning" in the direction of Mitchell's bill, he said. The plan backed by Dole and 39 other Republicans relies on subsidies and insurance changes to spread coverage, and contains neither tax hikes nor mandatory business contributions.

Mitchell worked privately to persuade moderate Democrats to embrace his proposal, despite misgivings about the delayed employer mandate.

In the House, Democratic leaders lobbied for support for their measure, designed to provide universal coverage by 1999 and financed largely by mandatory business contributions. Clinton spoke warmly of that measure, as well, at his prime-time news conference.

But many moderate Democrats are uncomfortable voting for these so-called employer mandates, particularly given Mitchell's decision to delete them from his bill.

Rep. Charlie Rose, D-N.C., one frequent critic of House Speaker Thomas Foley and Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, said he would vote against the plan.

"I don't want to see Democrats in close races forced by the leadership to vote for employer mandates which it could cost them elections at home," he said.

Another provision of the Democratic House bill came under attack from business and insurance groups opposed to an expansion of Medicare to offer insurance for the unemployed, the poor and workers of small business.

House approves compromise bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House approved a compromise $13.7 billion foreign aid bill Thursday including a reward for Jordan's peacemaking with Israel and relief for strife-torn Rwanda. The measure, approved on a 341-85 vote, includes $99-million as a down payment on President Clinton's promised $700 million in debt forgiveness for Jordan. The money will leverage the first $220 million in loan cancellations.

The bill was sent to the Senate for final approval before going to President Clinton to be signed into law.

Clinton's gesture came after Jordan's King Hussein and Israel's Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin officially ended four decades of hostility between their countries.

Further installments to pay down the debt will depend on continued progress toward a final peace agreement, lawmakers said.

Researchers test new artery protection technique on pigs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Artery wall thickening that often fells heart patients after balloon angioplasty may be prevented with a modified gene and an antiviral drug, according to researchers who tested the technique on pigs.

In a study at the University of Michigan, researchers showed that a blockage in the arteries of pigs caused by overgrowth of tissue could be reduced by putting an altered gene into blood vessel cells and later injecting the antiviral drug ganciclovir.

Dr. Gary J. Nabel, of the University of Michigan, one of the lead authors of the study, said the gene causes the forming cells to be sensitive to ganciclovir through the formation of what he calls a "suicide enzyme."

The study is being published Friday in the journal Science.

Nabel said that the gene technique offers promise for correcting a serious problem for heart patients who have been treated for artery blockage with balloon angioplasty.

In balloon angioplasty therapy, a catheter is threaded through blood vessels to the site of a blockage. A balloon-like tube is then inflated, pushing the material forming the blockage away from the center of the vessel and allowing a better blood flow.

But this process also injures the vessel wall, Nabel said. The body responds by growing new cells to replace those that were injured.

In about 40 percent of the cases, too many cells are grown and the result is that the artery is again blocked. Researchers have been trying for years to find a way to prevent this cell overgrowth, a process called restenosis.

In the Michigan study, Nabel said the gene and drug therapy starts a cascade effect that prevents resteno-

Knight-Ridder News Service

WASHINGTON — To foes of abortion, they're red alerts.

To abortion-rights advocates, they're red herrings.

The issue, predictions by abortion opponents that health-care reform bills coming to the House and Senate floors next week could require abortion clinics to be established in towns that have none.

The tactic has generated headlines like the one recently in The Morning Journal in Lorain, Ohio: "Lorain abortion clinic reverts in health plans."

Catholic leaders have stepped up their role in the debate by warning that as many as 560 Catholic hospitals might close rather than participate in a health-care system that covers abortions.

"It's saying to the government, 'If you do it, you know the consequences and they're pretty horrible,'" said Helen Alvarez, spokeswoman for the National Conference of Catholic Bishops.

The Senate health reform plan unveiled Tuesday by Majority Leader George Mitchell of Maine includes abortion in the basic benefits package, while House Democratic leaders are searching for compromise language for their bill.

Discussions are under way in both chambers about exempting individuals and religious institutions from abortion coverage. Final decisions probably will be made on the House and Senate floors.

Abortion-rights supporters and Clinton administration officials concede that the predictions by abortion opponents are complicating efforts to pass health-care reform.

But, they add, health-care reform neither would require the creation of abortion clinics nor force hospitals or physicians to perform surgery to which they morally object.

"They're resorting to histrionics," said James Waggoner, vice president of the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League.

The notion that including abortion in health-care reform would spawn hundreds, if not thousands of new clinics, as abortion opponents suggest, is "absurd," said one administration official involved with the health-care issue. "I can't deny that they've convinced those papers, but I can say it isn't so."

But anti-abortion activists counter that their advocates are disingenuous. If abortion is considered a basic health benefit, it also would have to be available to women in every part of the nation, they argue.

There's a mandate for the health plan to provide the services in the local service area. They have to be provided in facilities, they're not going to be provided in tents," said Douglas Johnson, legislative director of the National Right to Life Committee.

None of the health-care bills proposed by President Clinton or passed by House and Senate committees explicitly states that each town or county must have an abortion clinic, and one bill specifically rejects a clinic mandate. But no one knows what a final plan might say, and interpretations of existing legislation conflict.

One Senate committee bill, for example, says that a health plan must ensure that all benefits are provided, including access to specialty care.

But what does that mean?

"At the very narrowest of interpretations it would require creation of abortion facilities in these counties, which have no providers now," Johnson said. "We think it would be extended into the rural areas as well."

According to a recent report by the Alan Guttmacher Institute, a Planned Parenthood affiliate, 84 percent of the nation's counties had no significant abortion provider.

But Stanley K. Henshaw, deputy director of research for the institute and co-author of a study, said that including abortion in health care "doesn't mean that facilities would have to be created where they don't exist now."

Clyde Wilcox, associate professor of government at Georgetown University and co-author of a book on the politics of abortion, offered a more dispassionate interpretation: "What that means is it would be up to the bureaucracy and the courts to interpret the bill. It's not explicit in the language."

"Is it fair to say there will have to be a lot more abortion providers?" Wilcox asked. "Yeah, there will have to be some more. North Dakota and South Dakota are big states and will probably have to have more than one provider. ... It's not going to be the case that every small community would have an abortion clinic."

Imprecise language in any legislation can backfire and produce an unintended effect, noted Gail Wilensky, who ran Medicare and Medicaid in the Bush administration and now is a senior fellow at Project Hope, an independent health-education foundation.

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) —

Three rare white tigers were born in captivity and were doing well despite the mother's refusal to nurse the first-born.

They are the first kittens for Blanca and Blanco, the white tiger pair at the Rio Grande Zoo, officials announced Wednesday.

The first-born, a healthy male, has been getting bottled milk while Blanca nurses the other two. Curators haven't been able to get close enough to learn their sexes, said Tom Silva, curator of mammals.

Pizza slice could deliver man to jail

REDONDO BEACH, Calif. (AP) — A man could be sent to jail for 25 years to life because of a slice of pepperoni pizza.

Police say Jerry Williams stole the slice from a group of children.

On Wednesday, the District Attorney's Office said it would prosecute Williams for the alleged theft under the state's new "three strikes you're out" law because he has two previous serious or violent felony convictions.

Williams, 27, has pleaded innocent in Municipal Court to a felony charge of robbery and a charge of petty theft. He was being held in lieu of $100,000 bail.

Williams was convicted for robbery in 1987 and 1992, making him eligible upon a third conviction for a prison term of 25 years to life, said Santa Gibbons, a spokeswoman for the District Attorney's Office.

Williams, who stands nearly 6-foot-8, took the slice of pizza at about 7 p.m. Saturday from four children at the Redondo Beach pier.

The children, ages 7 to 14, were eating the extra-large pizza near the boardwalk while their parents are elsewhere on the pier, said Detective Mark Sturgeon.

They had only four slices left when Williams and another man walked by, and Williams asked for a slice, police said.

"It was told 'no' by the 14-year-old," Sturgeon said.

"Mr. Williams is kind of towering over this group of kids," the detective said. "He reaches down, picks up a slice of pizza from the table and walks off with it."

The pizza shop manager, who saw the incident, called police. Williams was arrested at a nearby arcade.

Later, he said that he did this on a dare by his brother-in-law and it wasn't that he was hungry. Sturgeon said. "He said it was pepperoni, and because he doesn't eat pork, he threw the piece of pizza in the ocean."

Commune head faces prison after kidnapping, rape

LIBERTY, Mo. (AP) — The leader of a religious commune faces a recommended 220-year prison sentence next month when he is punished for kidnapping and sexually assaulting a follower's young daughter.

A Clay County jury recommended the sentence Wednesday for Nelson DeCloud, 63, after convicting him of kidnapping, rape, sodomy and felonious restraint. Sentencing was set for Sept. 30.

The defense offered no evidence at the trial, and DeCloud declined to testify. However, attorney Michael Gunter said he would appeal the verdict.

A 24-year-old woman testified DeCloud attacked her at his commune for a dozen years, from about age 9 until she escaped in September 1992. She said she was brought to live with DeCloud and others when she was 6 and her mother joined the commune then in Raytown. She said she was beaten after a failed attempt to run away in 1985.

Prosecutors said DeCloud and nearly 30 followers fled Missouri after the young woman escaped and charges were filed.

The group stayed for five months at the Jimmy Swaggart Ministries complex in Baton Rouge, La., before moving to a farm house outside San Angelo, Texas.

Advice to Congress: Stop and smell the legislation

Whoa, whoa, whoa. Health-care reform may affect American lives more profoundly than any other congressional business in this decade. So what's the hurry?

Congress plans to start debating the various bills next week. The goal is to wrap up the voting by mid-month, and then bug out for the traditional late-summer recess. August, after all, is the time of year when Babylon-on-the-Potomac is at its most equatorial.

We all can sympathize with the rush to get out of Dodge during Sauna Season. But think: One of the leading proposals is the plan presented by Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell on Tuesday.

Tuesday's Congress is preparing to revamp one-seventh of the U.S. economy on the dead run.

Officials of the Congressional Budget Office — the guys who analyze the fine print for Congress — say they won't be finished studying the key bills before the votes are taken.

Terrifying. It's especially terrifying since we're talking about real people's lives and real people's real money. We'll use ourselves as an example.

Here at The Times-News, our health-care plan is pretty ordinary. It features a $200-per-person annual deductible, a $500 deductible as the national standard.

That doesn't sound much like an improvement to us.

How about you? Do you know how the Mitchell plan or the Gephardt plan would affect your health care, your insurance costs and your taxes?

Of course you don't. And neither does Congress.

President Clinton is asking Americans to call their congressfolk to demand universal coverage. Better you should call them to demand a timeout.

Let Congress take a few weeks off. Let our elected lads and ladies come home, visit a few county fairs and shake a few hundred hands. While they're touching bases with the voters, the Congressional Budget Office can be doing its job.

Then, along about September, maybe we can have a sane deliberation instead of a fire drill. With a little luck, we might even get a decision we won't regret.

The murder of a Pensacola, Fla., abortionist and his escort and the wounding of a third person are deplorable and despicable acts. They will not advance the moral arguments pro-lifers believe are their most powerful weapons in the debate over human life. It is important to remember that the strength of the civil rights movement came from its nonviolent approach to justice.

Paul Hill, the accused killer, perverts the intention of the Golden Rule when he twists it to justify the killing of those involved in the abortion trade. A better verse would have been "Vengeance is mine, saith the Lord. I will repay."

Pro-choiceers have been busy denouncing pro-lifers who, they claim, have contributed to a "wave" of killings (two dead abortionists and one dead escort, compared to 30 million dead babies).

Soon, no doubt, the full-page Planned Parenthood ads will appear with Hill's picture; inflammatory rhetoric and the coupon to send in money to fight "terrorism." Pro-choiceers have managed to avoid accountability for moving the boundaries that once protected all life.

When the Supreme Court decided Roe vs. Wade 21 years ago, those who said this would be the beginning of the cheapening of human life, and that it wouldn't be long before other lives were threatened, were dismissed as alarmists. Now, those who moved the boundaries want to reinstitute the limits when it comes to killing in the streets. Can they have it both ways?

Hill is called a "canary" by some. But standards today are negotiable and boundaries are movable — so who is to say how he might be viewed in the future?

Consider a historical parallel. During the months preceding the Civil War, there were many who looked upon John Brown as an insane criminal, because he believed murder was justified if it led to the abolition of slavery.

Brown's father had been a committed abolitionist, and Brown said he believed that slavery was a sin against Christianity. In Pennsylvania, his home became a station stop on the "underground railroad." His wife and seven children became radicalized abolitionists, who aided escaped slaves in their flight to Canada. In his 50s, he decided that force was the only means left to end slavery.

In 1854, several of Brown's sons settled at Osawatomie in Kansas Territory. Immediately they entered the struggle to make Kansas a free state. Brown joined them and took part in bloody fights and bitterly contested elections. In May, 1856, he and a small group of men, including his sons, retaliated against violence by pro-slavery mobs in a battle that left five pro-slavery settlers dead. Brown became known as a ruthless guerrilla leader pitted against slaveholders. During his personal war on slavery, one of his sons was killed.

As Kansas became a free state, Brown conducted a scheme for opposing the slave establishment throughout the South. He moved to Hagerstown, Md., and on Oct. 16, 1859, he and his group attacked the federal arsenal at Harpers Ferry, Va., hoping to seize arms and induce slaves to escape. Local authorities and U.S. Marines, under the command of Col. Robert E. Lee, killed most of Brown's men, including two more of his sons, wounded Brown and took him prisoner.

Brown was convicted of treason, murder and inciting slaves to rebellion. He was hanged on Dec. 2. At his trial he said he would "forfeit my life for the furtherance of the ends of justice, and mingle my blood further with the blood of my children and with the blood of millions in this slave country whose rights are disregarded by wicked, cruel and unjust enactments."

Brown's radicalism persuaded many Northerners, who had been indifferent to slavery, that abolition was necessary. Many historians now believe that Brown's acts helped bring on the Civil War. Once the war started, Brown was immortalized in a song in which his soul was said to go "marching on."

Was Brown's killing justified? Not by eternal principles. Would the war and emancipation have come without John Brown? Perhaps. Did the end of slavery justify the means Brown used? Principled people might disagree.

Not long ago, it would have been considered just as repugnant to kill a born person as it would an unborn one. If life is not a continuum, from conception to natural death, then all of us are potential victims if we fall out of favor with a ruling elite or a gun-toting killer.

Kids don't respect elders

I must share what I experienced recently. I still find it gruesome, painful and shocking to see what length some of our local citizens go to in the Twin Falls area will stoop to. Times have sure changed since my generation of the 1950s.

Miss Frances Sandie, a 90-year-old widow, handicapped till she is nearly house-bound, 34-year-old son on her farm near Murtaugh, a quiet soul, minding her own business, working and paying taxes all these years, was targeted by some teen-age boys with the intent to cause her a great deal of harm.

These boys went after her to settle a brief problem that arose over mowing her lawn a few weeks ago.

I drove into Miss Sandie's at 6 p.m. to do some work for her, cutting weeds, trimming trees, when I saw a stream of water flooding the area one-half way around her house. I went to investigate, only to find a garden hose and half-moon sprinkler inside the front seat of her good car. I ran the hose outside and came back to find practically a new right-rear tire had been knifed, and water running in the finished basement of her house for 10 feet or more.

These are the children of some prominent people. What has happened to the moral respect of our elders that we grew up?

This makes me sick.

Protest no-parking proposal

I watched the City Council meeting on TV Monday night. I watched because the proposed bike path was discussed and my brother and father who live on Fourth Avenue North are affected.

All the streets in question are to be reduced to parking on one side only or no parking on either side. The old townsite area basically has no driveways or no room for one, or if so, most people cannot afford to have it done. The City Council would have us break the jaywalking law to go across the street to get our car or endanger children's lives who often dash from their house to the car. If you have more than one car or have company or want a Christmas get-together — tough! They would have to walk long distances to your house. No parking!

The arrogant attitude of Councilman Chris Talkington really prompted this letter. He said, "We let you park on city streets. They belong to us and we can do what we want." Here's news for you Chris, you were most likely elected not for your popularity but mainly tooust your predecessor. It can happen to you, too.

I believe our government was formed of the people, by the people and for the people. So Chris, your "we" is "us" out here.

Councilman Altus said, "Well, I have to look up my kitchen window and see nothing but the new auditorium." I don't know what that has to do with anything, but that does tell me he must live on Altus and has plenty of garage and driveway space.

All the people that spoke were residents of these streets and all were against this plan and with good reason. Mayor Kleinkopf said there must be some bikers out there. His thinking backfired on him — the bikers also were against the plan. Tom Farrell came up with some alternate ideas, which really merit consideration.

This whole plan was ill-conceived and had no thought put into it other than "what we say goes." All residents affected by this half-baked idea, please write letters of protest to the City Council within 30 days. Let them know we pay taxes for these streets and we pay their salaries. Help stop this council's belief that it is boss over the people.

God-fearing people should rule

I read the other day with great amusement the headline, "GOP fears religious takeover." Boy, I would be scared too if religion would take over. Maybe morals, decency and love for your neighbors would take over. Truthfulness might ring in the halls of government.

Could it be that the GOP fears a religious takeover because it is not being truthful and doing the best for our country? I personally would rather see the government run by any God-fearing group of people than who is running the government now.

Lawyers and politicians have spent years telling us what is good for us. If it gets any better, we can all just send our paychecks to Washington, and they will take care of us. If I run my household expenses like the politicians run the government, I would be in jail for writing bad checks. We, the American public, just keep sending them back to do it to us again. Maybe we should help, not the GOP.

Student responsible for actions

Jason was a student attending the University of Idaho in Moscow last Jan. 22. While looking out of a third-floor window, Jason noticed friends outside below. He then climbed on top of a heater, dropped his pants and, while "mooning" his friends, fell through the window to the ground below. Jason suffered back injuries, cuts to his limbs and "bruised" buttocks. I assume his pride was still intact.

I do have to agree with the Wilkiness that the U of I was negligent, but I differ on the reason. Jason must take responsibility for his own actions and not try to shift blame. Our court system is overburdened with cases such as this. It is most unfortunate that educational funding will have to be wasted by the U of I in defending itself.

The only negligence to be found in this instance, other than Jason's lack of personal responsibility, is that the U of I did not weed out the application of an irresponsible fool.

Hurry, Mr. Siebe, the statute of limitations has not lapsed on that one.

Fire-gutted house poses danger

I want to express my sympathy for the victims of the fire at 301 First Ave. E. They lost everything. But the fire happened more than two months ago and the landlord has yet to clean up the mess. It looks worse than a corner of the city dump. There are ruined mattresses, broken furniture and appliances, discarded clothes and shoes and half-buried toys. The house is a burned-out shell that a stiff breeze could topple at any time.

Old houses like that are attractive to kids and, therefore, they are dangerous. Why doesn't the city do something?

Health-care bill not tailored for people

When a poor, black boy like Michael Jackson can grow up to be a rich, white woman who marries Elvis Presley's daughter, you know we live in a great nation.

And now, on to the outrage du jour concerning health-care reform. Enough already — enough that they're letting the private insurance industry keep $100 billion a year for doing a rotten job, enough that the big five insurance companies and the big HMOs are writing the bill, enough that we can't get doctors for rural areas or family practitioners — now the damn fools in Congress are caving in to PepsiCo (owner of Pizza Hut, which won't pay for health insurance for American workers but does for its workers in Japan and Germany) and other big corporations on the point of letting individual states set up their own single-payer systems if they want to.

Where are the conservatives, who say they're federalists on this one? Where are all those Republicans who like to blather about how states are the "workshops of democracy?"

Aux armist! Victory or death, as Col. Travis once put it. How dare they prevent some intelligent, forward-thinking state from starting its own single-payer system?

If the politicians in some Shangri-La like Oregon, lions of courage backed by the overwhelming majority of their people, want a single-payer system, who is Washington to tell them they can't have it? If Oregon pols are willing to pass the taxes and take the heat, why should Congress, just because it is so wretchedly gutless, say them nay?

The big multinational corporations, such as Coca-Cola, flinched a provision into the House bill that allows them to opt out of state single-payer systems and avoid paying taxes to support them, and that guts the state single-payer option. To hell with 'em: Let the people drink Dr. Pepper!

What we are now looking at in Congress is not a bill written for the people of this country; it's a bill written for MetLife.

If there is any saving grace to come out of the mess Congress has made out of the Clinton bill (which was no great prize to begin with), it lies in Sen. Majority Leader George Mitchell's insistence that we get health insurance for kids. For that much, let us be grateful.

Hanoi plays down Vietnam war 30 years after first U.S. air attacks

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — Thirty years ago this week, U.S. aircraft attacked North Vietnam in the Tonkin Gulf incident, setting the stage for an American military buildup and the most divisive foreign war in U.S. history.

Relations between Vietnam and the United States are now at their best since the conflict ended in 1975, and Hanoi's quiet marking of the anniversary is evidence of its eagerness to restore full diplomatic ties with its former foe.

U.S. planes bombed North Vietnamese naval bases and an oil depot on Aug. 5, 1964, to retaliate for what the Pentagon said at the time were torpedo-boat attacks against two American destroyers in the Gulf.

Sather Alvarez
North Vietnam's Tonkin Gulf.

Two U.S. aircraft were shot down. One U.S. pilot was killed and another became the first of nearly 600 American flyers to be captured by the Communists during the war.

President Lyndon Johnson submitted a resolution to Congress later the same day asking for expanded war powers in Southeast Asia. Congress overwhelmingly passed what became known as the Tonkin Gulf resolution on Aug. 7.

Coverage of the anniversary by official Vietnamese newspapers on Thursday was subdued compared to the extensive wordage of past years. This year, only two papers, Nhan-Dan (The Masses) and Quan Doi Nhan Dan (People's Army) — covered it at all, and they buried the stories on their inside pages.

The attack was synonymous with armed provocation and signaled the start of an aggressive war against North Vietnam, the army daily said.

It added that North Vietnamese gunners shot down eight U.S. planes, not two.

But in comparison to past years, when officials took the occasion to rail against American imperialism, this year's anniversary was more of a chance to issue a warning to China over territorial disputes.

Vietnam's relations with the United States have improved steadily in recent months. President Clinton lifted the 19-year U.S. embargo against Vietnam in February, and the two nations are due to open diplomatic missions any day. The missions are an important step toward the ultimate exchange of ambassadors.

Both papers stressed that Vietnam's lesson from the American air attacks should be to remain vigilant, especially toward threats against its sea coast, islands and continental shelf.

"Vietnam's sea territory is of great strategic importance, having direct effect on the defense of national independence and socialist construction," Adm. Mai Xuan Vinh, former commander of North Vietnam's naval forces during the Tonkin Gulf incident, said in an interview in Hanoi.

Vinh called for Vietnam to strengthen its navy and use it to exploit marine resources.

Vietnam has been haggling with neighboring China over claims to areas in the South China Sea believed to contain valuable oil and gas deposits.

China claims a large slice of offshore territory that Vietnam awarded to foreign exploration companies, including American firms: Mobil Corp., Atlantic Richfield Co., and Occidental Petroleum Corp.

Vietnam is drilling for oil in an area China granted to another U.S. company, Crestone Energy Corp., and Chinese ships have reportedly blocked the Vietnamese drilling platform.

Vietnam and China clashed in a naval skirmish in March 1988 in the Spratly islands, an archipelago potentially rich in oil and gas that both countries claim.

Yugoslavia withdraws support for Serbs

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Serb-dominated Yugoslavia withdrew support for Bosnia's Serbs Thursday, backing out of a war it bankrolled for more than two years at the risk of its own economic ruin.

The Yugoslav government, which represents Serbia and tiny Montenegro, immediately sealed the 309-mile border between Yugoslavia and Serb-held Bosnia to exports of everything except food, clothes and medicine.

It also said all Bosnian Serb leaders would be banned from its territory.

Bosnian Serbs have depended on Yugoslav for weapons, fuel and other supplies throughout the 28-month war against Muslims and Croats. The severing of political and economic ties could be a turning point in the war if Belgrade is true to its word.

Yugoslavia has clamped down on Bosnian Serbs before, but a stinging attack on Bosnian Serb leaders by President Slobodan Milosevic of Serbia suggested that this time, the rift is for real.

Milosevic, the region's main power broker, said Bosnian Serbs had jeopardized their people by rejecting an international peace plan. "That is why we have to cut off all further relations and cooperation with such a leadership," Milosevic said.

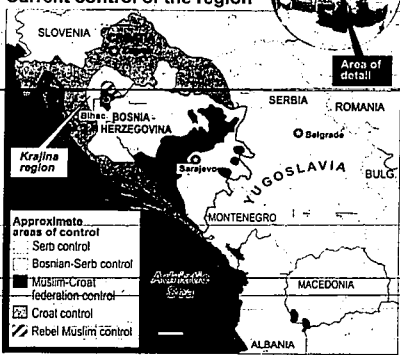

He appealed to Bosnian Serbs to oust their leaders, whom he branded

Yugoslavia severs Bosnian-Serb ties

The Yugoslav government, which represents Serbia and Montenegro, severed all political and economic ties Thursday with Bosnian Serbs due to their rejection of the latest international peace plan. The Bosnian Serbs have relied on Belgrade for military and other supplies during the war.

This policy will virtually cut off Serb-occupied regions of Croatia from Serbia.

Current control of the region as "war profiteers." Montenegro and Serbia are the only two republics remaining in Yugoslavia. The secession of Slovenia and Macedonia was relatively bloodless, but was erupted Croatia and Bosnia-Herzegovina when they declared independence.

Milosevic is widely viewed as the chief instigator of the fighting in Bosnia as well as the earlier conflict in Croatia.

But Serbia, which dominates Yugoslavia, faces a tightening of 2-year-old trade sanctions punishing it for its role in the war. Milosevic apparently wants to stave off further economic ruin that could jeopardize his hold on power, even at the price of abandoning his Serb brethren in Bosnia.

In recent weeks, Milosevic's Socialist party has set up an offshoot in Serb-held Bosnia. Milosevic's appeal to jettison Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic indicated he wants to become leader of the Bosnian Serbs.

Karadzic warned his people to prepare for rationing and other hardships. But the Bosnian Serb assembly speaker, Momcilo Krajcinovic, offered to resign. Hinting at a possible change in the Bosnian Serb leadership, he said others also were willing to step down to appease Yugoslavia.

At the White House, press secretary Dee Dee Myers called Yugoslavia's decision "a positive step."

"We'll have to see the action on the ground. We'll have to watch and see if that border actually seals up," she said.

A hard-line Bosnian Serb leader, Biljana Plavsic, was turned back at the Yugoslav border Thursday.

Karadzic told The Associated Press. Associated Press photographer Srdjan Ilic reported from the border that Bosnian Serb trucks were backed up for two crossings where the atmosphere was nervous and tense. Only empty trucks were allowed to proceed.

At U.N. headquarters in New York, the acting Yugoslav ambassador, Dragutin Djokic, said the Belgrade leadership was "very, very resolved" to reach a peace agreement.

"This is a very strong message that was sent to the Bosnian Serbs and I am sure they will take it very seriously and act accordingly," he said.

Yugoslavia's announcement was the first indirect admission that it did supply the Bosnian Serbs with fuel and other military supplies. Belgrade constantly denied doing so. Yugoslavia denounced the Bosnian Serb leaders for rejecting the peace plan that would reduce Serb holdings in Bosnia from 70 percent to 49 percent of the republic.

A Muslim-Croat federation, which has accepted the plan, would get the rest.

By rejecting peace, the (Bosnian Serb) leadership has committed the hardest act against the federal republic of Yugoslavia, the Serbian and Montenegrin peoples, and all citizens living in these regions," the government said.

Labor congress suspends strike

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) — Nigeria's largest labor organization Thursday suspended a 2-day-old national strike aimed at toppling the military government and said it would enter talks with army leaders.

The Nigeria Labor Congress, a 41-union umbrella group, directed its 5 million members to return to their jobs, but said it would consider resuming the strike Saturday if the talks fail.

The congress' branch in Lagos, Nigeria's commercial center, said it would continue the strike.

Oil workers also vowed to continue their month-old strike, which has deprived oil-rich Nigeria of revenue and nearly paralyzed the country. They struck July 4 to protest the imposition of Moshood K.O. Abiola, who appeared to be winning the June 12, 1993, presidential election by a landslide before the military government annulled the election.

Abiola was arrested after declaring himself president on the first anniversary of the election. He is on trial for treason.

Israeli air raid in Lebanon kills 7

DEIR ZAHIRANI, Lebanon (AP) — An Israeli jet bombed a two-story house in a Lebanese village Thursday, killing seven civilians, including two children, and wounding 13, security sources said.

The building in the Shiite Muslim village was destroyed when a jet fired a missile into it. The casualties were among three families living there.

"A house in Deir Zahirani was struck by error by a bomb that missed its target," the Israeli military said in a statement. "Innocent people aren't targeted for attack," it said, and expressed "apologies for the losses."

The attack on Deir Zahirani followed two raids on a base in southern Lebanon of the Iranian-backed Hezbollah, which Israel has blamed for recent bombings of Jewish and Israeli targets in Latin America and Britain.

The attacks heightened tensions as Secretary of State Warren Christopher prepared to visit the Middle East this weekend to promote Israeli-Syrian talks.

The first raid began when four fighter-bombers fired four missiles at the Hezbollah base in the village of Ein Bouswar Thursday evening, said the sources, speaking on condition of anonymity.

An hour later, as guerrillas were trying to salvage equipment, two Israeli jets crossed the border and fired a rocket on the same target. There was no immediate word on casualties at the

Nameless rich Russians flaunt it

MOSCOW (AP) — Their glass-and-wood palaces are sprouting in the woods west of town like Russia's prized mushrooms.

They flock to Moscow's pricey new shops or jet out to Paris, London and New York at a moment's notice, dropping hundreds of dollars at a time, thousands on a World Cup ticket, fortunes on foreign real estate.

Russia's super-rich have got it and are flaunting it — but no last names please.

"Why do you need to know that?" says Galya, who came to town for the day and was considering a $1,700 Parisian dress at Moscow's elite Vogue boutique. She travels abroad once a month to shop on her businessman husband's salary, but won't say what business he's in.

Being rich in Russia, after all, means you're either a target, or a soldier, of organized crime. Kidnappings are on the rise, and ordinary Russians are advising their kids to stay away from parked BMWs in case they're loaded with car bombs.

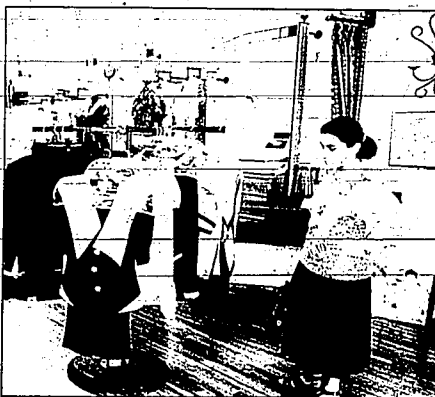

Who are the new rich?

Many Russians, after decades of Communist indoctrination and several rough years of cultural capitalism, will answer: crooks. And they're not always wrong.

"The government closed its eyes to ethical and legal irregularities to speed up the creation of a new class of owners," says Pavel Voshchanov, a journalist and former press secretary to President Boris Yeltsin.

"The positive result is there's little chance of reverting to communism. The negative result is that Russia is becoming a criminal state."

Many fortunes sprang up nearly overnight when old Communist party and factory bosses, often helped by Anagor Kazeyeva from Baku, Azerbaijan, contemplates purchasing a French-made designer suit in a Moscow boutique. The hefty $1,800 price tag is not a deterrent for wealthy Russians who have prospered under economic reforms.

aspiring young "biznesmny" used their positions to corner riches and influence. Even those entrepreneurs who earned their success honestly may be driven to shady dealings by mob extortion, tax laws, and weak or corrupt law enforcement.

While it's not impossible to earn millions in Russia through hard work and fair means, it is quite hard.

"This new class of millionaires has nothing to be proud of," says Harvard economist Marshall Goldman.

"They're exploiting the system and are between rich and poor was narrower and better hidden.

There is no way to tell how much the best-heeled Russians are worth, since they hide what they have from the tax collector and the gang enforcer. But they're probably millionaires ten times over.

The minimum monthly wage, meanwhile, is 20,500 rubles — a little more than $10.

Polls typically show no more than 5 percent of Russians say they are doing much better these days.

The polling firm Vox Populi tried to sort out the new elite this summer with a list of the richest Russians. The rankings were estimates, with no income figures.

No. 1 was Vladimir Gusinsky, head of the Most Group, which is into everything from banking to construction. Gusinsky was on vacation and couldn't comment, his office said.

But second-ranked Oleg Boiko, chairman of a bank and trading company, told The Moscow Times he didn't like the publicity. "I am happy I was not first," he said. "Let Gusinsky be the object of all the attacks the top people are always subject to."

Little is known about the two men, except they are young and self-made.

Foreigners, once the best-dressed, best-fed denizens of the capital, have sticker shock these days, staying in more often while nightclubs, restaurants and fancy stores fill up with wealthy Russians.

Dutch close embassy

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — Dozens of French residents spent the night in the French Embassy, and about 1,000 others were gathered Thursday in more easily defended locations following an attack that killed five Frenchmen.

The Netherlands closed its embassy and advised the approximately 30 Dutch citizens in Algeria to leave.

Fifty-six foreigners have been slain since September, 19 in the last month, in attacks blamed on Islamic fundamentalists.

Paris pledged to maintain a strong diplomatic and economic presence in its former colony, but officials admitted they are largely powerless against the anti-foreigner attacks.

9 newspapers protest taxes

TIRANA, Albania (AP) — Nine independent and opposition party newspapers announced a four-day strike Thursday to protest what they claim are unjust taxes that threaten their survival.

Many journalists have accused the government of using taxes and a new media-law to stifle dissent in opposition newspapers.

The government contends that the taxes are a legitimate part of the country's post-communist economic reforms and that newspapers must compete to survive.

The striking newspapers include one run by the Socialists, the biggest opposition party, and the largest independent newspaper, Koha Jone, which has increased its price by 50 percent to try to meet the taxes.

Queen mother, 94, celebrates birthday

LONDON (AP) — As staff members brought in flowers, cards and boxes of chocolates, a frail Queen Mother Elizabeth celebrated her 94th birthday anniversary Thursday by greasing some of the hundreds of well-wishers gathered at her home.

Leaning heavily on a stick, the Queen Mum exchanged pleasantries with some of the estimated 2,000 people at the gates to Clarence House.

The crowd cheered upon seeing the Queen Mother and sang "Happy Birthday" to the accompaniment of a military band.

Resort hotel bomb kills 1, wounds 2

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — A bomb planted under a car exploded Thursday outside a luxury hotel on Montenegro's Adriatic coast, killing one person and wounding two.

The bomb exploded in a parking lot at the Avala Hotel in the resort town of Budva. The Tanjug news agency said police suspected revenge was the motive for the bombing, but it was under investigation.

The blast set 15 cars on fire, Tanjug said.

Floods in China kill nearly 1,900 people

BEIJING (AP) — Floods in wide areas of China have killed 1,846 people, injured thousands more and caused an estimated $8.7 billion in losses in the first half of the year, an official report said Thursday.

More than 100 million people in flooded areas in six southern provinces and several northern ones were affected by floods caused by torrential rains in June and July, the official China Daily reported. More than 1.6 million houses were destroyed and millions of pters damaged.

Man, 39, found dead at auto accident scene

HAILEY—Steven Lee Brand, 32, was found dead at the scene Wednesday night after he was ejected from his vehicle in a roll-over accident on Timmerman-Hill south of Hailey.

Brand was traveling at a "high rate of speed" on Highway 75 at about 9:20 p.m. Wednesday when his car went off the road. He over corrected, went back across the highway, and rolled over several times, said a spokeswoman at the Idaho State Police.

He was not wearing a seat belt.

Jerome City Council changes setbacks on several streets

JEROME—The City Council Tuesday approved an amendment to the planning and zoning ordinance, changing the setback on several streets.

The amendment allows some lot owners, on D, E, F and G streets, and on 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th streets the right to build to within 15 feet of the front lot boundary.

Interested lot owners on those streets may call the city clerk's office to see if their lots were approved.

New students in the first through fifth grades can register during regular office hours without an appointment. School begins Aug. 22.

Red Cross will resume whole blood collection Monday

BOISE—The American Red Cross is planning to resume collecting whole blood at a reduced rate Monday, but it won't be until at least mid-September before a blood drive is held in the Magic Valley.

The region ceased most whole blood collections in March after a U.S. Food and Drug Administration inspection found problems at the Boise blood bank. The Red Cross decided to stop collections and solve those problems.

FDA public affairs specialist Monica Ravelle said that the Red Cross submitted a satisfactory correction plan. Another inspection will make sure operations at the blood bank are following FDA rules, she said.

An American National Red Cross Quality Review and Assessment team began July 22 a regional operational evaluation that ended July 29 in Boise.

The annual inspection revealed a couple of training issues that employees worked on to correct, said Red Cross spokeswoman Trudy Sullivan.

Sullivan said the September blood drive calendar has not yet been set, but officials expect to hold the first Magic Valley blood drive in mid-to-late September or early October.

Residents give post office high marks for service

TWIN FALLS—Residents in Idaho and eastern Washington gave their post offices high marks for service, again.

These findings were reported in the latest customer survey done by the Opinion Research Corp. of New Jersey. Opinion Research conducts the Customer Satisfaction Survey every three months.

For this last survey, post offices in Boise, Pocatello, Twin Falls and other southern Idaho cities had a combined customer satisfaction rating of 88 percent.

Post offices in northern Idaho and eastern Washington had a customer satisfaction score of 88 percent.

Cameron discusses health care

By Frank E. Lockwood
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—A Magic Valley senator predicts unemployment will rise and the number of health-care options will fall if President Clinton's health-care legislation becomes law.

Sen. Dean Cameron, R-Rupert, told the Twin Falls Kiwanis club on Thursday that Congress needs to reach a bipartisan consensus on health care instead of embracing universal coverage.

"Let's work on the things that we can agree on," Cameron suggested, saying a similar approach has worked well in Idaho.

When he's not working in the state Senate, Cameron is a Rupert insurance agent. But he says his goal isn't simply to protect the insurance industry.

"Everyday, I meet with consumers, employers, employees, and the uninsured," Cameron said. "I can see better than most people, the need for health-care reform."

The Rupert legislator criticized the Clinton plan, but touted "health care reform, Idaho style," an approach he says is "completely different" from the administration's proposal.

During Cameron's tenure, the Legislature and Gov. Cecil Andrus have "taken steps" to reform the system in this state.

The improvements Cameron cite include:

- Caps on insurance rate increases.
 - Laws that facilitate switching insurance companies without a lapse in coverage.
 - The establishment of medical savings accounts that are state-tax free.
 - Limits on how long insurance companies can refuse to cover pre-existing conditions.
 - Greater options for insurance purchasers, both basic and standard plans.
 - Unified claims forms to simplify paperwork and lower overhead costs.
- A proposal to prioritize which medical procedures are most deserving of government funds was vetoed by Andrus.

Cameron says prioritizing health care, as Oregon has done, could be important.

"One of the questions as a society we have to ask is: Are we willing to pay for every medical procedure that's available to us? If we do (pay), there's a cost," he said.

Cameron supports universal access, the notion that everyone should be able to obtain access to health care, but he opposes forcing everyone to participate in that program. He's also against forcing tax-funded abortions on the public.

President Clinton's plan includes government-funded abortion.

While Clinton sees a national health-care plan run from Washington, D.C., Cameron wants to keep health-care decision making closer to home.

"I have not seen government on the state or federal level do anything cheaper than what can be done on the private level," he said.

Idaho's Legislature has worked to make health insurance obtainable at a

TWIN FALLS—Overnight vandals are apparently displacing and destroying highway equipment on the Perrine Bridge, costing the equipment's owner money and jeopardizing the lives of motorists.

"They're just out there raising heck and somebody's going to get killed," said Betty Elliott, president of E&F, Inc., a highway traffic-control corporation based in Meridian.

Every week for the past three months, one of Elliott's maintenance workers has been finding the flashing arrow board moved close to traffic lanes, plywood barricade boards broken and orange drums floating in the Snake River on hunk up on nearby cliffs.

Visitor numbers at Shoshone Falls and Dierkes Lake are down from last year's attendance but are still higher than the numbers from 1992, according to a city official.

Park attendance decreases

By Sean L. McCarthy
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS—As Shoshone Falls flows, so flow the tourists.

Logically, then, attendance at the city's Shoshone Falls-Dierkes Lake park complex could have been expected to drop somewhat this year in the face of less spectacular water levels at the 212-foot-high falls dubbed "the Niagara of the West."

During the second week of June 1993, water was flowing over the falls at a rate of 13,000 cubic feet per second—the most since 1986. One cfs equals 449 gallons per minute.

This year's high-water mark for Snake River flows below Milner Dam was 3,280 cfs on April 11.

It was still better than Thursday's flow of 1,100 cfs at the falls. Mike Beus, a hydraulic engineer with the Bureau of Reclamation in Bureau, said that water releases at Milner will drop by 100 cfs per day until reaching 200 cfs.

The flow levels are decreasing because water mandated for the sake of salmon in the Snake and Columbia river systems is nearly used up, Beus said.

The federal government requires at least 200 cfs to be released from Milner Dam.

Of that, little will actually be seen falling over Shoshone Falls. Most will probably go exception. Browning said Wednesday.

When there's a lot of water to be seen, there are even more people around to see it.

Browning said "word gets around" if the water levels at Shoshone Falls are extraordinarily high or low.

Last summer was tough on park personnel, he said, because of the overcrowding. Parking was scarce, restrooms fell into disrepair, and extra help was needed to pick up trash left behind by the all the added tourists, he said.

But the increased interest in the falls helps generate unforeseen revenues for the parks department. All fees raised by Shoshone Falls and Dierkes Park go back directly into employee salaries and capital improvements at the two parks.

Browning said he is unsure what impact, if any, will be felt from last week's drowning death of a 24-year-old Coeur d'Alene man, Terry Mangeris died after plunging into the falls.

He said that as of 1995, the department has a lot of determining how many people are visiting each of the two city parks. No differentiation is made now between Shoshone Falls visitors and Dierkes Lake visitors.

Revenues for Dierkes Lake

The city has no definite way to keep track of how many people visit the Shoshone Falls-Dierkes Lake park complex. The daily gate fee of $2 admits one carload of tourists into the park. Season passes also are available at $25 apiece, allowing unlimited access to the parks during park hours.

Here are revenues raised by the city as of July 28:

1992: $46,737

These figures include the $2 daily gate fees as well as the $25 season passes.

through Idaho Power Co.'s hydro-power plant instead.

City Parks Superintendent Chad Browning said this year's park-attendance numbers are still an increase over 1992's turnout. Last summer was the Chief justice threatens lawyers, media with sanctions

The Associated Press
The Times-News

BOISE—The chief justice of the Idaho Supreme Court has threatened lawyers, media and others with sanctions for what he calls "contemptuous behavior" and "inflammatory statements" about recent court rulings.

In an article in this month's issue of the Idaho State Bar Journal, "The Advocate," Chief Justice Charles McDevitt accuses unnamed individuals of seeking personal advantage by "unwarranted and outrageous attacks" on the courts and impugning the motives of judges.

In Idaho, the chief justice is also the executive head of the entire state judiciary. McDevitt's article assailed critics of both "judges and the courts."

McDevitt did not specify which rulings have been attacked.

But in this spring's often-contentious election battle between conservative lawyer Wayne Kidwell and sitting Justice Cathy Silak, Kidwell criticized the court's February decision overturning Michel John Odiaga's second-degree murder conviction.

And since early June, the court has struck down the state's mandatory minimum sentencing law for drug traffickers, overturned a murder conviction because of an illegal search on the Nez Perce Indian Reservation and reversed a Lewiston woman's drunken-driving conviction.

The court ruled that since she was cited for another infraction at the same time, it amounted to charging her twice for the same crime.

Prosecutors and other law enforcement officials criticized that ruling, as did Attorney General Larry EchoHawk, the Democratic nominee for governor, and GOP gubernatorial nominee Phil Batt.

Last weekend, The Idaho Statesman published a letter from Herbert K. Bell Jr., Boise, described as a certified public accountant with a law degree, calling the drunken driving ruling a blunder.

"In addition to not being able to read the law, you have lost all perspective—if you ever had any," Bell's letter to the Supreme Court said. "You have lost all sense of direction—if you ever had any. You're dangerous. You're more dangerous than that drunken driver." It said.

'In addition to not being able to read the law, you have lost all perspective, if you ever had any.'

—Herbert K. Bell,

in a letter to the Idaho Supreme Court letting individuals who commit manslaughter go free; set law enforcement back 20 years and other "equally outrageous statements."

While asserting that people have the right to criticize rulings, judges are being "vilified," and can no longer stand silent, he wrote.

"The courts must reach out and exercise their plenary power to penalize officers of the court who make such inflammatory statements, while still permitting legitimate debate of issues of law."

"The court must, through official spokespersons, respond to outrageous media posturing and, if necessary, take action against contemptuous behavior."

McDevitt's article did not say what sanctions might be imposed against attorneys or others. He would not elaborate Wednesday, saying it was for discussion.

State Solicitor General Lynn Thomas, who argues cases before the Supreme Court, said he wasn't sure whether the article was meant to silence attorneys who might criticize the court.

"I suppose it could be read that way. These kind of things tend to have a chilling effect," Thomas said.

He was not sure what inflammatory statements McDevitt was referring to in the article. "All I've seen are statements about the effects of the rulings."

Batt has criticized the recent court rulings as hindering law enforcement, and said as governor, he would appoint "law and order justices" to the court. All five members of the current Idaho Supreme Court were appointed by Gov. Cecil Andrus.

Batt press secretary Amy Kleiner said Batt did not impugn the motives of judges and that he has the right to comment about their rulings.

"Phil's not trying to take political advantage. It's a legitimate issue for gubernatorial candidates to comment on," Kleiner said.

Agreement will protect Stanley Basin outfitters, senators say

By The Associated Press

STANLEY—Both salmon and Stanley Basin outfitters will be protected in an agreement over use of the Salmon River, Sens. Larry Craig and Dirk Kempthorne say.

This week, the Forest Service told outfitters they would have to stop commercial rafting beginning next Monday in the Sawtooth National Recreation Area.

Due to low water, the agency decided rafting constitutes a "take" of the fish because their spawning beds could be damaged by the boats and their passengers. The Snake River chinook are listed as threatened species because of their low number.

With more water last year, the rafting crews generally floated down the middle of the river, while the fish spawned near the edges.

Outfitters who contacted the Republican lawmakers contend they had little advanced warning of the change, and feared many customers are already in transit for the prepaid tours.

The senators said Gary Smith, acting regional director of the National Marine Fisheries Service, "pledged the matter would be resolved" in a couple days.

Four outfitters on the river hold permits to carry up to 180 people each day during the summer months.

Outfitters will be asked to use special measures, such as carrying boats around spawning beds and compressing the float trips around sensitive areas in a shorter time period.

If any problems arise, Smith stated he would call the two senators back, they said.

"This situation can be worked out so salmon, jobs and Idaho's inflow of tourist dollars are both protected," Craig said.

"We're going to drive home the point with these federal agencies that they cannot continue to make decisions in a vacuum," Kempthorne said.

Blaze inches near Payette Lake homes

The Associated Press

Forest Service officers watched lightning-caused fires burning dangerously near homes on the east side of Payette Lake Thursday and warned residents about a possible evacuation.

The Blackwell complex of fires mushroomed from more lightning starts Wednesday night to 2,000 acres, burning to less than a mile from the lakeshore at McCall in central Idaho.

Seven camps were evacuated, including Camp Morrison, a Boy Scout camp on the edge of the lake.

Fire bosses called for more help. There were 140 firefighters battling the blaze Thursday evening, another 180 firefighters were expected to arrive by 240 more were on order when they become available.

The view from town is quite spectacular," Payette National Forest spokeswoman Kathleen Menke said. "It's a huge cumulus cloud five miles high with flames inside."

Valley County sheriff's deputies went door to door on Thursday morning, telling residents to stay posted if the fire closed in.

The head of the fire was moving north and east, away from the lake. Air tankers swathed the flames with retardant to give firefighters time to secure some line.

During the day up to four aerial tankers dropped retardant on the flames, aided by three helicopters, four bulldozers and six fire engines.

The Corral fire, across the lake and 7 miles north of Brundage Mountain Ski Area, grew to over 400 acres. Fire bosses are trying to stop the blaze from burning salmon spawning habitat in the Black Creek drainage.

The force of firefighters grew to 200 Thursday and another 180 were on order.

The Warm Springs fire, eight miles north of the Corral blaze, blew up from eight acres on Wednesday to 450. Both were burning in bug-killed, tinder-dry timber. Goose Lake road and all the campgrounds there are closed.

Menke said the Lick Creek road from McCall east to the community of Yellow Pine remained open, but advised against any travel north of that road.

At least 40 new fires were spotted on the Payette forest from Wednesday night's lightning blast. Nineteen were staffed and tankers dropped retardant on some of those without initial attack personnel.

To the south, crews in the Boise National Forest hustled to contain their fires before the weather turned against them.

Firefighters mopped up a 1989-90 Bannock Creek fire near Idaho City, about 35 miles northeast of Boise. It was declared contained Wednesday. They continued to tie together hand and bulldozer lines on several other blazes which covered about 2,400 acres.

Wendell plans workshop

By Steve Kochler
Times-News correspondent

WENDELL — Who should pay for new sewer and water lines, and who should install them? City officials plan a workshop at 2 p.m. Monday to answer these questions and to discuss replacing obsolete water lines.

"We've got a system that's wearing out," said Mayor Lynn Nelson about the city's old water lines. "What are we going to do before it reaches a crisis? It'd be awful to have a whole bunch of folks with no water."

Because the city has a housing shortage, people who move here build new homes, Nelson said. But a problem develops when a second party builds a new home adjacent to the first and wants to hook into the new lines for which the first already has paid.

"I think there needs to be some standards and ordinances in place for those who are installing lines," Nelson said. "The city crew shouldn't be subsidizing the builder, but we want the work done right. I think the city and the city crew installing it are over."

Greg Misbach of the Division of Environmental Quality in Twin Falls said that before installing new water or sewer lines, a city is required to have plans and specifications approved by the DEQ. The city engineer is responsible for inspecting the work, Misbach said.

City Engineer Scott Bybee will attend the workshop, Nelson said. The mayor encourages public input, hear the information from Bybee, and consider ways to pay for the work.

In related business, City Clerk Racquel Braga announced that a representative from Operations Management International Inc. in Twin Falls will attend the city's next budget workshop. The city is considering hiring the company to operate its public works services except trash collection.

The public meeting begins 7 p.m. Wednesday at City Hall.

Winning bidder pledges to create jobs

The Associated Press

Lockheed Idaho Technologies Co., fresh from winning a five-year, $5 billion contract to manage the Joint Small Engineering Laboratory, has set a goal of creating 1,000 eastern Idaho jobs in the next five years.

And to show it is not bluffing, the Lockheed Corp.-led team also has agreed to tie the base management fee it receives from the Department of Energy to its success.

The base fee will not be set until Congress approves the budget for next year. But whatever it amounts to, Lockheed will forfeit 20 percent. If spent on new jobs, the Department of Energy to its success.

The base fee will not be set until Congress approves the budget for next year. But whatever it amounts to, Lockheed will forfeit 20 percent. If spent on new jobs, the Department of Energy to its success.

Under the contract, awarded Wednesday and scheduled to take effect Oct. 1, Lockheed Idaho's base fee will be reduced each year until 1999, when the company will attempt to earn 80 percent of its fees through performance.

Lockheed Idaho President John Denison said his California-based company will move 72 senior managers to Idaho and Las Vegas, Nev., technology application division to manage the project. That will employ at least 60 people.

Ed House, dean of graduate studies and research at Idaho State University in Pocatello, said Lockheed's new office would benefit 120 graduate students working on degrees in the field of hazardous waste management program. House said the office would provide students with opportunities to participate in more waste management research projects at the INEL.

But International, a member of the Lockheed team, also plans to open a $3 million composting plant in Idaho Falls, creating 20 new jobs, Denison said. And Parsons Environmental Services, another team member, will move a field office to Idaho Falls that will employ 20 to 30 workers.

Lockheed pledged in accepting the Energy Department contract to provide small business with $180 million of subcontracting work in the upcoming budget year. The current contract calls for $158 million in subcontracts.

Lockheed also pledged to consolidate and enhance the site's educational functions in what it calls the INEL Institute. Denison said the institute will put university and industry educators under one roof.

The company hopes to use the institute to train entrepreneurs in starting small businesses that use technology developed at the site. Denison said other functions for the institute include training site workers for new jobs and giving them continuing safety training.

Energy Department officials have high hopes for the program.

As a matter of fact, we're hoping that we're going to be the Harvard of the West Coast," said Dolores Ferri, an Energy Department-Idaho official who presided over the contractor selection board.

Adding to the economic development plan is Thermo Electron's $10 million pledge for a new facility. Lockheed attracted the company to its INEL team because of its expertise in creating new businesses, and it starts off in Idaho by fronting money to fledgling businesses.

Boy, 9, charged with auto theft

IDAHO FALLS (AP) — A 9-year-old Idaho Falls boy has been charged with auto theft after he allegedly drove a car from a sales lot to his home, police say.

The fourth-grader is accused of taking a 1992 Saturn sedan from Budget Auto Sales on Wednesday and driving it several blocks.

His mother called police and said her son just drove a car without any plates to their home, the report said.

The boy, who is 4 feet, 10 inches tall, told his mother he took the car because it had keys inside and no one was around. He is free awaiting an appearance in juvenile court.

Restoration helps tribal members

FORT HALL (AP) — For John Appenay of the Shoshone-Bannock Tribes, news that Lockheed Idaho Technologies Co. will manage the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory means seven miles of riverbank won't be the first view for the tribe.

Appenay and nine other tribal members are fencing off the bank to stop erosion caused by livestock. Lockheed is funding the three-month project to restore the reservation's dwindling trout populations.

"It's to give the fish population back for future generations, the children and grandchildren," said Appenay, 24.

Cattle and bison have stirred up silt and altered the streams, which raises water temperatures and destroys fish cover.

"It's just like a highway down there," said Fort Hall fisheries biologist David Arthaud, as he pointed to a stretch of Clear Creek in the Fort Hall Bottoms. "Fish need diversity in their habitat."

Lockheed approached the Earth Conservation Corps, an environmental service group running the project, about program four months ago.

"It's about restoring the environment and it's about supporting the work of the Shoshone-Bannock Tribes," Lockheed spokeswoman Linda Marvin said. "We intend to broaden that partnership through the INEL."

Marvin said the future might include other projects and employment opportunities.

"Looks like just some pranks kids are doing out there, but those pranks can get somebody killed," she added. "You bear the responsibility for your choice."

Citing one local woman who developed cervical cancer while uninsured, Cameron asked the audience, "Should we have the responsibility to pick up and pay for her expenses?" Society's going to have to answer that question."

That's just one topic legislators will have to tackle in 1995. Another dilemma, according to Cameron, who pays health costs for those who live "unhealthy lifestyles."

Legislators are discussing a voucher system to aide minimum-wage workers who struggle to pay their bills and pay for health care. Cameron said, "And they're making some minor readjustments to health-care laws recently enacted."

Cameron wants voters to know that the Legislature is "very concerned about the health-care problems that you all are facing," and he hopes to "encourage the private sector to step forward" and play a major role in reform.

State troopers can ticket tribe

BLACKFOOT (AP) — State troopers can ticket Shoshone-Bannock tribal members for traffic infractions committed along Interstate 15's Highway 91 in the Fort Hall Indian Reservation, 7th District Judge James H. Hurd ruled.

His decision reversed an Aug. 18, 1993 ruling by Magistrate Charles Roos.

In that case, tribal member Rozina George asked to dismiss two citations she received on two different occasions from Idaho State Police officers.

On Feb. 15, 1993, she was ticketed for not heeding a stop sign and failure to show proof of insurance. She was cited again on April 11, 1993, for speeding, failure to show insurance, resisting and obstructing an officer and refusing to produce her driver's license. The resisting charge was dropped.

She maintained the troopers were operating outside their jurisdiction. Her tribal attorney, Candy Jackson, relied on a 9th Circuit Court of Appeals decision on a case in the Colville Indian Reservation in Washington.

In that state, traffic infractions are considered civil in nature, and give tribal police jurisdiction, so state officers can neither stop nor ticket them. If Washington police did stop a tribal person, they would radio for tribal officers to continue the investigation.

George's proposal would create an unworkable situation for the state and county officers that would require them to show up through the reservation. Herndon said: "If the officer has no authority to stop, then certainly the officer has no authority to detain."

Herndon wrote Idaho law differs from Washington law in that traffic infractions are considered criminal, giving the state jurisdiction.

Blackfoot attorney Carter Mckley argued for Idaho that state-maintained roads belong to the state even though they run through the reservation. The state owns the right-of-way and pays for its maintenance.

Jackman replied state officers could still stop Shoshone members and inquire about their tribal status. Once a trooper stopped a tribal motorist, he could radio for a tribal policeman to take over.

She maintained that even though the state built the roads and maintained them, the state legally belong to the Shoshone-Bannocks.

For sale: Big Rock Candy Mountain

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — For sale: a piece of Americana.

Big Rock Candy Mountain, recognized worldwide by a once-popular song describing its lemonade springs and crystal fountains, is for sale. Lock, stock and barrel.

The mountain and adjacent properties in Marysville Canyon will be sold on-site in a bankruptcy auction at noon Aug. 12 by Ekelens Sales & Auction of Salt Lake City.

The fabled lemonade springs goes with one lot of property, as does the motel in Marysville Canyon and restaurant, all on about 42 acres. Another lot features cabins along approximately 35 acres of river-front property.

The song "In the Big Rock Candy Mountain," described the fantasy of a hobo's Shangri-La. The song was written by Harry "Haywire Mac" McClintock in 1924.

McClintock penned the song while a brakeman on the short-line railroad through Marysville Canyon in southwestern Utah. The song was performed separately many years later by Burl Ives and Tex Ritter. The auction also includes memorabilia from the roadside resort, including photographs of McClintock and Ives and paintings of the site.

At the time the song was written, hoboes were not perceived as homeless and even Shoshone Indians, it says, it was like being an Indiana Jones to be a hobo. Said Richard Black, office manager and salesman for Ekelens Sales & Auction,

"The mountain is perhaps best known for its 'lemonade springs,' which contain high levels of calcium and iron. The water has been bottled on-site. The label says the waters relieve a wide variety of ailments."

A satisfied customer from Egypt wrote: "While vacationing in Utah in March, I purchased your special water and am pleased to report my finger nails are no longer peeling and splitting." She asked for six more quarts.

Auctioneer Tom Ekelens received queries on the sale from investors in Hong Kong, the Platte River and even Disney Studios.

A hobo's paradise comes at a price, however. The property has appraised for just under $1 million, Ekelens said.

Sparks cause evacuations

SOUTH OGDEN, Utah (AP) — Hundreds of Weber County residents were evacuated and two firefighters injured when a train sparked 10 fires Thursday morning.

A westbound Union Pacific train started the fires that threatened homes and businesses in Utah and South Ogden, said Weber Fire District Chief Glen Burton.

"The smoke just filled up our house almost immediately, and we began grabbing anything we knew we couldn't replace," said South Ogden resident Angie Call.

The injured firefighters were treated for smoke inhalation. Flames were driven by 50 mph winds down a hillside to within feet of about a dozen homes in a cul-de-sac in Utah, on the Weber-Davis county line north of Layton.

The fires scorched their way north, threatening parts of South Ogden, said Weber Fire District Assistant Chief David Austin.

The blaze caught the eaves of several houses on fire, but brush fire units were able to douse the flames, Burton said.

Firefighters from nine Weber County agencies—and—the Intermountain Fire Agency controlled the blaze by mid-morning. Before then, the fire filled Weber and Davis counties with dark smoke and closed some access routes to U.S. 89.

Man ordered to stand trial for boy's murder

BOISE (AP) — A Meridian man Thursday was ordered to stand trial for first-degree murder in last month's death of a 24-year-old boy.

Philip D. Walker, 48, appeared before a 10th Circuit County magistrate who scheduled his arraignment next Wednesday in 4th District Court.

Walker is accused of sodomizing Chevelle Freeman on July 16 or 17, causing injuries that led to the toddler's death. He was living with Chevelle and his mother, Tina Langlois, 21.

The boy died July 19 of peritonitis—an infection in his abdomen caused by a tear in his colon. Ada County Coroner Erwin Stenning said Walker was being held without bond Thursday in the Ada County Jail.

Tom Johansen, a used car and scrap dealer, looks over a solvent extraction column that is among the major components of a nuclear fuel reprocessing plant the Energy Department sold to him.

Federal guard watches major components of nuclear plant

POCATELLO (AP) — A federal security guard was in place Thursday to watch over the major components of a nuclear fuel reprocessing plant the Energy Department sold to a Pocatello used-car and scrap dealer.

The equipment, originally purchased for use at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory, had been guarded for more than a year in a warehouse across the street from Tom Johansen's Frontier Car Corral.

Johansen paid $154,000 for the $1 million worth of hardware through the government's competitive-bidding process in July 1993. Energy Department officials assumed the equipment, which became surplus when the agency stopped reprocessing spent reactor fuel two years ago, was being sold for scrap.

But Johansen said he planned all along to market it abroad for its original use, even though reprocessing produces highly enriched uranium that can be used to make nuclear weapons.

Energy Department spokesman Brad Bugger said similar reprocessing equipment can be bought on the open market by anyone with enough money. It was built for the government by the Ralph M. Parsons Co. of Pasadena, Calif.

But Bugger acknowledged that officials should have stated clearly that the equipment was being sold only for scrap, and as a result of the incident the agency is developing policies on handling export-sensitive materials.

Meanwhile, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission will not grant Johansen an export license to sell the equipment in another country and the Energy Department apparently wants to buy it back.

During an interview Thursday, Johansen played a recording of a telephone conversation he had with Richard Hopf, the Energy Department's procurement chief, in which Hopf said he wants to "bring the issue to a close."

"The contract did not do what it was supposed to do, and let's say we can turn it back the way it was and give you your money back that you paid the government as well as make you whole for whatever time and expense and damages you may have suffered from it," Hopf said.

Negotiations continued Thursday.

Johansen initially contacted British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. about buying the equipment, but the private company was not interested. He later had prospects in Japan, South Africa, Russia, and most recently was offered $8.3 million by an Australian company that apparently has a potential buyer in India.

Johansen also has the blueprints and technical manuals for the equipment, as well as a government directory of nuclear facilities worldwide. They were obtained through the Freedom of Information Act and from a Westinghouse Idaho Nuclear Co. employee. None of the material is classified.

After months of getting the runaround from the Energy Department and Nuclear Regulatory Commission about either licensing the equipment for export or buying it back, Johansen finally got the government's attention after a story ran Wednesday in the Wall Street Journal.

Until then, he said, federal officials seemed to hope the problem would go away if they ignored it long enough.

"I think they hoped that I'd run out of patience and money, and just give up," Johansen said. "Once I gave up, they knew the only alternative I'd have would be to turn it into scrap."

Now Johansen is being flooded with calls from media outlets throughout the world. A representative of Unistar Pictures even called him about making a television movie — a comedy — based on his story.

He said he would not consider the offer.

"I'm not into that. I don't even like having my picture taken," Johansen said. "I tried for a solid year to get this thing taken care of without media."

Man indicted, arrested for blaze in Nampa

NAMPA (AP) — A Nampa man has been arrested for allegedly starting the July 18 fire that destroyed an entire city block in Nampa.

John Chris Geissler, 36, was in the Canyon County Jail on Thursday in lieu of $20,000 on two counts of first-degree arson and one count of second-degree arson.

Nampa Police Lt. Richard Frizzell, an investigator with the Canyon County Arson Task Force, said the unemployed Geissler had been the only suspect almost from the beginning. He was indicted by a grand jury Thursday morning.

"We found some witnesses that put him right at the origin of the fire," Frizzell said, but it remained unknown why or exactly how the blaze was started.

"That old silo building is so old, it's just a tinderbox. It wouldn't take much of anything to ignite it," Frizzell said. "It could have been started with an accelerant or just materials to pile up and start the fire."

Damage from the blaze has been estimated at more than $11 million.

Besides an empty silo, it claimed Stone Lumber, the city's oldest business — some vacant buildings and the warehouses of Union-Seed, which produces alfalfa seed for the United States and Canada.

A Mexican restaurant and an accounting office also sustained heavy smoke damage.

It was the second fire at the 88-year-old Stone Lumber operation in less than 25 years. Its offices also burned to the ground in 1971. Firefighters battled flames as high as 60 feet for three hours. A fire station was just two blocks away, but equipment and personnel from seven departments were called in.

No one was injured.

Smoky skies

Bud Endler, a visitor to the Post-Falls area, walks away from a grass field burning on Wednesday. Grass growers in North Idaho have begun their annual 14-day burning season. Many residents oppose the burning because of the thick smoke produced.

Coalition sues federal agencies to save salmon, stop barging

BOISE (AP) — Eight conservation and fishing groups have sued the federal government to improve conditions for Idaho's migrating salmon, charging next year may be the last chance to save them.

The coalition filed suit Thursday in U.S. District Court in Portland, challenging the government's efforts to save Snake River salmon, specifically over barging the young smolts around eight hydroelectric dams.

Since 1968, the government has been barging smolts, said Charles Ray, salmon director for Idaho Rivers United. "I think this year's return of adult salmon proves conclusively that barging is a failure."

"Barging cannot and will not save salmon from extinction. In fact, if safe in-river passage is not provided for these fish, extinction is inevitable," he said.

Only 3,868 spring and summer chinook, designated threatened species, have returned to the Snake River so far this year, less than one-sixth of the average for the past 10 years.

The main reason is that in 1992, when those juvenile salmon headed seaward, there was a drought, low river flows and the federal agencies did little to nothing to help the fish, Ray said.

It is critical passage conditions for next year's Snake River chinook juveniles are good, because they are the offspring of the last decent runs, he said.

The situation was exacerbated by the recent death of about 90,000 fall chinook smolts at McNary Dam on the Columbia River due to warm river temperatures and a malfunction of the smolt collection system.

U.S. District Judge Malcolm Marsh ruled last year's biological opinion for operating the Columbia Basin dams was inadequate and violated the Endangered Species Act. The eight groups are concerned the operating agencies will continue to rely on barging instead of in-river passage.

"We asked Marsh to get more specific, that they can't barge fish," said Pat Ford of the Save Our Wild Salmon Coalition. "He's told the federal agencies what they're doing is unacceptable. We want him to say exactly what they should do."

Neighboring say the only time Holmes left home was to buy groceries. Her 1978 Chrysler had been driven 13,000 miles.

"She had a telephone, but rarely answered it. The grounds of her North Boise home are overgrown with shrubbery and dying trees. Tattered drapes shut out the world at every window. Red and white "keep out" signs hang from the doors.

Fisher was working on his 37th and 38th novels when he died at the couple's home in Hagerman. After his 1968 death, Holmes left Hagerman and never returned. Marian Compton sold Holmes her Boise home in 1974.

It still hasn't been painted, Compton said. "In all this time, she hasn't done a thing to it. It's sad, because it was a lovely home."

The Ada County coroner's report describes "a house in total disarray, with books, magazines, newspapers and boxes piled everywhere."

Police and a deputy coroner investigated after receiving a call Saturday from Judy Lombardi, a neighbor. They estimated Holmes died four to six days earlier.

In March, Holmes was hospitalized for congestive heart failure, listed in the coroner's report as the cause of death. Lombardi, her closest friend in the neighborhood, bought groceries for her since then.

She called police after noticing the groceries untouched on Holmes' doorstep.

Where some neighbors found a cantankerous recluse, Lombardi found a friend:

"I've heard people had tussles with her, but she was always good to me. When my kids were little, she'd buy them books. They picked flowers and put them on her door."

Numerous literary projects, from public displays of Fisher's work to reprints of his books, were postponed or canceled because of her objections.

"She didn't want his work to go out to just anybody," Lombardi said. "She had an ironcore integrity. If she felt someone had not done right by her or Vardis, she would accept nothing from them, even if it would have made her life easier."

Her death raises the question of what will become of Fisher's literary legacy. She was an orphan raised by her grandparents and had no blood relatives. No will was found.

80-year-old widow of Idaho novelist dies in Boise home

BOISE (AP) — For 20 years, Opal Laurel Holmes lived the life of an urban hermit — a hermit sitting on an untapped literary fortune.

Holmes, widow of the late Idaho novelist Vardis Fisher, was found dead Saturday in her Boise home at age 80.

Investigators found Fisher manuscripts, lucrative but unanswered proposals from publishers, piles of unopened mail and unshredded checks. Trails weaved through stacks of books that filled the house. Many, including valuable first editions, since have been removed.

Fisher was the author of 36 novels. He was a winner of the Harper Prize, a close friend of Thomas Wolfe and was credited with writing the first significant fiction to come from the Rocky Mountain Region. Holmes was his third wife.

Some of Fisher's better-known books are "Children of God," his Harper Prize-winning historical novel on the early years of the Mormon Church; "Tale of Valor," a historical novel about the Lewis-Clark expedition; the "Antelope" novels, set in eastern Idaho and "The Testament of Man," a 12-book series on the evolution of human thought.

The best known in recent years is "Mountain Man," used in making the Robert Redford film "Jeremiah Johnson."

"She was a neighborhood mystery," neighbor Ruth Murdoch said. "She didn't go out, and she wouldn't let anybody in."

Neighboring say the only time Holmes left home was to buy groceries. Her 1978 Chrysler had been driven 13,000 miles.

"She had a telephone, but rarely answered it. The grounds of her North Boise home are overgrown with shrubbery and dying trees. Tattered drapes shut out the world at every window. Red and white "keep out" signs hang from the doors.

University wants more funding

BOISE (AP) — Boise State University wants to get paid for its role before the University of Idaho's Boise-based undergraduate engineering program gets any bigger.

Boise State officials will ask the state Board of Education's Finance Committee at hearings later this month to endorse a $1 million request for the spending year that begins in July 1995.

Provost Daryl Jones said Wednesday that $823,000 would help Boise State recover the cost of general education and engineering science courses taken by University of Idaho students attending classes in Boise. Another $178,000 would be needed in 1996 and $500,000 in 1997 to handle proposed expansions to the program.

Senator vows to continue fighting for more changes

The Associated Press

Sen. Dirk Kempthorne voted on the losing side as the Senate Environment and Public Works Committee approved authorizing the Superfund toxic-waste law, even though two of the Idaho Republican's amendments were accepted.

Even with the changes, Kempthorne said, "the bill is not as strong as it should be. It would take longer to clean up sites under this new bill than it does under current law, and that's already too long," the freshman senator said.

He vowed to press for additional improvements when the measure comes before the full Senate.

The legislation is aimed at speeding cleanup at the country's worst toxic-waste sites and reducing legal fights over who is responsible for the wastes.

The 1980 law has been criticized widely as being ineffective, although billions of dollars have been spent on the program.

Kempthorne said his amendments encourage voluntary cleanup of waste sites and allow for remediation of existing sites. Both activities were discouraged or banned under the Superfund law.

"My amendments remove the disincentives in current law that are keeping companies from going in and cleaning up waste sites and mines," he said. "The Superfund law should allow EPA, industry, and states to cooperate in cleaning these sites, not putting up roadblocks to removing these environmental hazards."

Thousands come to see the horses, wagons and new pioneers forge the Snake River at Glens Ferry's Three Island Crossing.

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

GLENN'S FERRY — It started out as kind of a hobby, Marvin Wootan explained.

Four oxen and a few thousand dollars later, it's an industry.

"I live down here by the Snake River, and when Wilson-Stein (a former Union Pacific railroad engineer and state senator) came up with the idea for the (Three Island) Crossing, I thought it was interesting. Pretty soon, I was part of it."

Wootan, a 64-year-old Indian Cove farmer, is smack in the middle of a unique bit of Idaho heritage. Every August, he rides a wagon — or more typically, a horse — into the river in front of thousands of people. The idea is to duplicate what Oregon Trail pioneers did in front of a few jackrabbits nearly 150 years ago.

"I think it's important to remember our heritage," Wootan said. "And this is an important event for Glens Ferry."

In eight years, the crossing has gone from a mid-summer event that drew fewer than 200 locals into a regional happening that attracted 22,000 people last year, which was the 150th anniversary of the opening of the Oregon Trail.

It's the centerpiece of an effort to make Glens Ferry, which is located astride both the river and Interstate 84, into a hub for history buffs and heritage-minded tourists. The town is trying to raise money for an Oregon Trail

Wagon Ho!

For one Three Island crosser, it's a hobby run amok

Three Island Crossing set for weekend

The ninth annual Three Island Crossing will be held at Three Island State Park on the Snake River near Glens Ferry on Saturday, Aug. 13, at 11 a.m.

The crossing will be preceded by a pioneer breakfast at 6 a.m. A barbecue will follow at noon at the park, at a cost of $5 for adults and $3 for children, and there will be arts and crafts shows, entertainment and food concessions all afternoon.

Ticket cost for the crossing is $3 for adults, $1 for children.

interpretive center and a local couple recently formed a non-profit foundation to restore the Opera Theater, which was built in 1914.

Combined with vintner Jim Martell's development of a recreational complex near Three Island State Park, it's a big economic boost for a town with a large percentage of retired residents and a limited number of jobs, according to Honey Mowery, the crossing's spokeswoman.

"The interpretive center will eventually cost about $1.9 million," she said. "That's a big undertaking for a town of 1,100 people."

But being doomed to repeat history is not without its charms. Wootan figures he spent hundreds of hours looking for oxen (they're not that hard to find, as it turns out); building a yoke (he made a cardboard template from a yoke he found on a farm near Wendell) and locating somebody to build him a wagon (a fellow in Missouri makes them to order).

The real trick at the crossing is learning to anticipate what can go wrong," he said. "And you have to know the river."

The crossing takes place on a stretch of water about an eighth of a mile across. In dry years, like this one, horses and oxen pulling the wagons may only have to swim 100 feet or so, but the current is always swift.

"And if you get too far downstream, you get yourself in a deep hole," Wootan said.

Idaho Power Co. lowers the water level when it can, but that's not always possible if the crossing happens on a very hot day in a low-water year.

"If Idaho Power is trying to meet a peak demand, there's not very much it can do about the level of the water in the river," Mowery said.

A few horses have drowned over the years, but Wootan said the crossing has gotten easier and safer with time.

"By now, we have a pretty good idea of what to expect," he said. "And the horses and oxen are used to it."

The wagons follow a rope across the river, surrounded by outsiders and jets that are there to animals that get into trouble.

"One year I was out in the deepest part of the river and my saddle started to slip," Wootan said. "You can't cinch up a saddle much because the horse can't breathe in the water, but if the saddle slips and you fall off, the horse could go under. So I was calling for a knife to cut the rope. Nobody had one."

"The only guy who did had jeans so tight he couldn't get the knife out of the pocket."

For 35 years, Spinners have been snapping back

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

JACKPOT — There are folks, now mostly fortysomething, who still can't hear the twang of a rubber band without tapping their toes.

For that you can blame Pervis Jackson and three other guys from suburban Detroit, who helped lay down the backbone of a generation with "The Rubberband Man" and in process made the Spinners one of the most successful groups of the golden age of rhythm 'n' blues.

Between 1972 and 1977, they spent more weeks on the Billboard pop singles charts (106) than Diana Ross (82), Marvin Gaye (66), The Doobie Brothers (63) or The Eagles (62).

In seven and a half years, the Spinners earned seven gold pop singles, according to Billboard. That's more than any other R&B artist in history except Michael Jackson, Prince and Earth, Wind & Fire.

"Ours is basically the same sound we used to practice back in high school by singing a capella in a shower room for the acoustics," Jackson said.

That was 35 years ago, if you're counting, spanning the do-wop, funk, disco and rap eras. The Spinners' first hit, "That's What Girls Are Made For," broke into the Billboard Top 40 on July 17, 1961, the same week that Lawrence Welk's "Calcutta" went No. 1.

When the group's last hit, a medley of Sam Cooke's "Cupid" and "I've Loved You for a Long Time," got to No. 4 some 19 years later, No. 3 was Queen's "Another One Bites the Dust." And later this year, the Spinners will go back into the studio to record again — perhaps to turn out a chart-topper to contend with Soundgarden or Ace of Base.

"Our formula is really very simple," Jackson said. "We sing good music that people want to listen to, and we try to do it with some class."

Branford Marsalis
Enjoys new TV career

Marsalis brings jazz — not Leno — to Sun Valley

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

SUN VALLEY — Two years ago, jazz musician Branford Marsalis traded in a non-stop life on the road for a cushy stool, stage right, on "The Tonight Show with Jay Leno." When he talks about the switch, he sounds ambivalent.

"I enjoy it (the TV show) for the most part; I'm learning," said Marsalis last week in a phone interview from his Burbank, Calif., office. "Some people get affected in this business; I think people get into this business to get affected. That's not why I'm in this business, I'm kind of in this business under protest."

The permanent gig on the "Tonight Show" happened fast for Marsalis. One day, he got a phone call — Leno knew his work, would he sign on as music director?

Music Festival

Branford Marsalis will perform a jazz concert at the Sun Valley Music Festival, to be held at 6:30 p.m. Aug. 14 on the Trail Creek Cabin grounds. Tickets, priced at $18 general admission for non-Sun Valley Center members and $6 for non-members 12 and under, are available at Sun Valley area ticket outlets or by calling 726-9491.

"Three years ago, I would not have said I would be in Burbank today," Marsalis said. "Things crop up out of nowhere. Life takes turns. I've realized only the Lord has control."

The gig was too good to turn down. And it had been a long road from here to there. Growing up in New Orleans, the oldest of six sons, Marsalis caught the music bug, at least in part, from his father, pianist Ellis Marsalis. Another son, Wynton, was equally smitten with sharps and flats.

Wynton played in Branford's teen funk band, the Creators, in the '70s. Branford signed on with a band Wynton formed in 1981.

Branford has often been quoted as saying he's been influenced by the rock sounds of Elton John, Led Zeppelin and Deep Purple. Wynton, according to the July 30 edition of "The New York Times," has criticized musicians who he felt chose popular commerce over the artistic demands of swing — such as when Branford hooked up with Sting in 1985.

Wynton is an acclaimed trumpeter, composer, and artistic director of the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra. The brothers play music together "sometimes," according to Branford.

More often, Branford Marsalis is hanging things with our sound that we couldn't do as a quartet," Jackson explained.

They soon signed with Motown, and with tenor sax player Cameron as their fifth voice, made a steady living even as the do-wop groups on which they had patterned themselves — The Drifters, The Platters, The Moonglows — faded away. The Spinners turned out "I'll Always Love You" in 1965 and "It's a Shame" in 1970, written and produced by a Detroit kid who called himself Stevie Wonder.

By then, R&B was reaching a mass audience, thanks to the Supremes, the Jackson 5 and "It's a Temptation," and was high-tech, thanks to Jimi Hendrix and Sly & The Family Stone. The four-part harmony that was Motown's stock-in-trade was suddenly competing with guitars, strings, horns and a dizzying number of effects.

Beginning in the spring of 1971, Avco Embassy Records released a series of singles by a Philadelphia soul group called The Stylistics, produced by a former club piano player named Thom Bell. The Stylistics' records sold like hotcakes, the Philadelphia Sound found a national audience, and Atlantic Records, the Drifters' label, wanted a part of it.

At about the same time, the Spinners were looking for a replacement for Cameron, who had left the group. They found him in a young tenor from Cincinnati named Phillippe Wynne, who had auditioned unsuccessfully to replace David Ruffin with the Temptations.

The combination of a new label, a new singer and a new producer was less than a year, the Spinners turned out three gold singles — "I'll Be Around," "Could It Be I'm Falling in Love" and "One of a Kind Love Affair."

"It was the same basic sound we'd always had, but I think the fact that Atlantic had made a serious commitment to the success of the group were a big part of our success," Jackson said.

He said the Spinners would listen to literally thousands of songs, in the end finding one that fit the group. And since all five members at various times sang the lead, it was a thoroughly collaborative process.

"We'd hear a song and someone, like, 'This sounds like Bob,' and we'd know it was right."

The most right of all came in the spring of 1974, when the Spinners collaborated with the hottest female singer in America, Dionne Warwick. "Then Came You," featuring Warwick and Small, went No. 1 in three months.

"Singing with Miss Dionne Warwick was important to our career," said Wynne. "It helped expose us to a wider audience and it helped us get into the casino showrooms in Nevada."

Rubberband Man," a funky ballad about a roadhouse musician who enchants audiences with only a rubber band, followed in 1975 and 1976, respectively. Wynne left the group to go solo, but he kept on coming.

John Edwards succeeded Wynne and Michael Zager replaced Bell, and in 1980, the group covered Frankie Valli's "Working My Way Back to You" in a medley with "Fur," which climbed to No. 2.

Five months later, "Cupid" ("I've Loved You for a Long Time") became a hit, and the Spinners haven't stopped singing since.

"We're probably on the road 75 to 85 percent of the time," said Jackson, who like Fambrough, Smith, Edwards and Henderson still lives in the Detroit area. "And we still love to sing the old songs. That's what people come to hear. The come to hear the Spinners' sound."

And that's what he'll hear on the Spinners' records, Jackson promises.

"I like all kinds of music," Jackson said. "As long as it's good music."

Knight-Ridder News Service

The sounds of this summer are familiar by now: old rock and cash registers.

There's little doubt that 1994 will be the new watershed year for the concert industry, "predicts Pollstar, the trade magazine that focuses on the live-concert business, in its mid-year report."

The previous record, reached in 1990, was $1.1 billion. A new watermark of $1.5 billion "is not out of the question," Pollstar says.

It is a remarkable rebound, coming only three years after 1991's industry crisis, when total concert revenues dropped 25 percent from the '90 high, thanks to a dearth of big-name tours, the impact of the recession and uncertainty over the Gulf War.

But numbers tell only part of the story. The success of this concert year also must be attributed to the extremely profitable staying power of classic rockers. Consider that some of the top 10 grossing tourists, mid-year feature veterans: Pink on stage with Leno. When asked how the two get along, Marsalis chuckled.

"He's the worst, and I plan on hitting him to take over the show," Marsalis said. "Even if that fails and I get arrested, I can be on CNN every day."

Marsalis said, "Even if that fails and I get arrested, I can be on CNN every day."

When Marsalis was producing, writing, arranging and performing on "Buckshot LeFonque," his new album for Columbia Records due this week, he asked permission to use a joke about Denny's restaurants from a Leno monologue.

"Jay said, 'Sure, no problem, no problem,'" Marsalis said, laughing his way through a high-pitched, not-bad, Leno impression.

The cut, "Breakfast at Denny's," is one of 13 tracks on the eclectic collection of instrumentals, vocal ensembles and readings being marketed as part rock, hip-hop, jazz, reggae and African musical forms.

The new album will join Marsalis's other works, including his 1993 title album, "Bloomington," hailed as a landmark recording in contemporary jazz.

"I hate bad music," in 1993, Marsalis won a Grammy for Best Jazz Instrumental Performance and, in 1994, followed up with another for Best Pop Instrumental Performance. He also worked on film scores for Robert Redford's "Sneakers" and Spike Lee's "Mo' Better Blues."

Though it all, Marsalis has often spoken out about what he perceives as a public indifference to jazz.

"It's true, he said last week, adding, 'but I don't say that with anger. I continued, 'We would be subject to the petty whims of the general public if everyone liked it (jazz).'"

By the time he was tapped for the "Tonight Show," Marsalis was touring 300 days a year. He can't do that any more. His upcoming Sun Valley show is a one-nighter.

"It's just a gig, just from California to Idaho," said Marsalis, explaining that he hasn't even done that sort of thing for a while. "I miss being on the road."

Summer rocks with yesterday's bands

Floyd, the Eagles, Billy Joel, the Grateful Dead, Rod Stewart, Rush and Phil Collins. (Pop diva Barbra Streisand, Janet Jackson and Michael Bolton complete the list.)

Tenors by Elton John and Billy Joel, the Rolling Stones, the Dead (again), Steely Dan, Yes, Fleetwood Mac and Stevie Nicks are still to come this year or in the early stages.

And looming inexorably over the summer — as if an exclamation point were needed — is the 25th anniversary celebration of Woodstock, featuring Bob Dylan, the Allman Brothers, Johnny Cash and a host of other long-lived performers in addition to newer acts.

"If you look at the top acts every year for the past five years, you'll find that the list has been dominated by acts from the '60s and '70s," says Gary Bongiovanni, editor in chief of Pollstar. "We have not seen a lot of development of acts in the 1980s (that were) able to sustain their careers this well, and we have not seen many (emerging) in the '90s who have gone on to become arena headliners. The big marquee acts are still the Pink Flouids and Rolling Stones and Grateful Dead, year in and year out."

What makes this year special is that act like "Flouids or the Stones don't tour every year but every three, four, five years, which helps make the concert business cyclical," Bongiovanni says. "1994 happens to be a real high point in the cycle... a lot of the really big bands decided they were going to tour this year."

And why not? The Eagles reunion has been an extraordinary success. With tickets priced as high as $125 at some venues, and with shows sold out or nearly so, the box office numbers have been astounding.

The band grossed $5.1 million in four shows in Irvine, Calif., in May. A single show at Sam Boyd Stadium in Las Vegas netted $1.9 million.

Pink Floyd, in its first tour in seven years, had 17 of the top 30 money-making concerts at mid-year. At the same point, after 12 cities and 34 shows, the Grateful Dead has grossed $17.6 million. And it's hardly going out on a limb to say the Stones will do well on their tour, which began Monday in Washington, D.C. But if these megatours can't be discounted as exceptions, what then to make of the Moody Blues, touring summer after summer — and still grossing almost $7 million in concert revenues this year?

"It's very simple: stage craft. We're a touring band, and we've been on the road this summer. Yes has always been interested in making an evening entertaining. We don't have to go out to play our hit single because we don't have any. The bands that still survive it's because they put on a good show."

"I think a lot of the new bands get famous quickly, (but) they don't have any stage presence because they don't have all those years of going through the clubs, finding your way on a stage in a bar. The write good songs but don't know how to lead an audience for more than a half-hour — and audiences can get very bored very quickly."

The Eagles' Don Henley explains the phenomenon similarly. "We never considered ourselves an oldies band," he told writer Leonard Pitts Jr. in Houston a couple of weeks ago. "I think we're pretty good musicians... We always tried very hard to make quality music and to write good lyrics and make good recordings. I would like to think that has something to do with the way our popularity has lasted — the work, the sweat and the craftsmanship."

The appeal cannot be explained away simply as Baby Boomer nostalgia. Consider the crossover generations of fans for Rod Stewart and the Grateful Dead. And what about the Steve Miller Band, which has developed a whole new audience of teen-agers and twentysomethings?

The older rockers have maintained their followings and developed new ones "because people know they're going to hear an excellent show," says Jack Boyle, chairman of Cellar Door Companies, the largest concert promoter in the country. "They've been watching Jimmy Buffett for 20 years, and they know exactly what the show is going to be like and how happy they're going to make them."

Grateful Dead, Rod Stewart — the same thing. You have faith in what you're buying."

Ben Liss, executive director of the North American Concert Promoters Association, puts the appeal of the older groups in a larger context. "Older groups are a larger portion of the stars of a generation or more ago — before, as I said, movie queen Norma Desmond would have it, the movies got small."

"We are going through a generational change," Liss says. "The older things easier for younger, say, Lollapalooza or Nine Inch Nails or Red Hot Chili Peppers are trying to claim their own identity. Maybe they're not interested in Fleetwood Mac and the Eagles. But the new acts come quicker and are gone quicker."

"It's not like the market place is so fragmented and it's so difficult to capture the imagination of consumers, bombarded with choices that it's hard for a new artist to stand out now."

A relatively new trend is making things easier for emerging bands. Since the mid-1980s, dozens of 15,000- to 20,000-seat outdoor amphitheaters have mushroomed across the country. Often built on cheap land and strategically located near highways and major population centers, these venues have expanded the market — in some cases creating a new one — raising the opportunities, and the stakes, for artists and promoters.

More than two-thirds of the concert business today falls between Memorial and Labor Day, according to Liss. With seats to fill in such a narrow window of opportunity, promoters turn to the tried-and-true — restarting the cycle anew.

This trend toward outdoor amphitheaters has steadily increased over the last 10 years. (Liss had a profound impact on the business," says Bongiovanni of Pollstar. "Their limited operating-period of three or four months during the summer and their desire to book as many shows as possible in that time has created a tremendous demand on artists."

Spouse leaves thin wife for fat woman

DEAR ABBY: I am writing this for "Fat but Not Happy."

Many men actually prefer women with a few curves and a little meat on their bones. I have noticed that some men don't care for skinny women. I am a thin woman, and I watched my weight and I wouldn't get fat, and guess what? My husband dumped me for a fat woman — not "chubby," mind you; 5 foot 4, weighing 210.

THE OTHER SIDE
DEAR ABBY: I, too, have struggled with weight all my adult life. I am 36. The man I was married to for 11 years constantly threatened to leave me if I ever became fat. (I was pregnant at the time.)

Well, I spent most of my married life wishing he would leave. As I got heavier and heavier, topping 300 pounds, he didn't leave me, but I left him!

After that I slimmed down, dropped 60 pounds and remained single for four years; then I met a wonderful man and we have been happily married for a year.

My weight started creeping up on the again when I mentioned it, he laughed and said he loved me just the way I was, and I shouldn't expect to become a slave to a thin body just because that's what society expects.

Abby, "Not Happy" needs to love herself and be happy with who she is. And her husband needs to love the person inside of her. With age, accidents, surgery or having babies, our bodies change.

Oh, one more thing... my complaining, degrading ex-husband cheated on me when I was fat — and thin. Explain that!

CHEERFULLY CHUBBY IN SLIDELL, LA.

DEAR ABBY: I found an abandoned photo album in the vast mountain junk that a disgruntled tenant left for us to clean up in an old Victorian mansion near downtown Los Angeles.

The tenant was a notorious scavenger and, as such, went through people's trash (literally). Most of the stuff was worthless, but at least one item could be priceless.

It is a photograph album containing photos from the late '30s through the '50s. It apparently had belonged to a Japanese couple whose last name was "Tsunekawa."

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

Smack dab in the middle of this album are photographs of (presumably) the Tsunekawas and fellow Japanese-Americans in an internment camp at Poston, Ariz. I cried when I saw how they did their best to be gracious in the midst of a civil liberties travesty. Will you please help me locate this family? I'm sure they would be grateful to have this album.

ELLEN S. LAKEVIEW TERRACE, CALIF.

DEAR ELLEN S.: How generous of you to make an effort to locate the Tsunekawa family. If they write to me at P.O. Box 69404, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069, I will put them in touch with you.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I go to Florida for three months every winter, and we have made a habit of calling our married children every Sunday. (They live in Illinois.) All of a sudden, my husband decides that it is our children's place to call us in Florida. If they want to talk to us, he says, "why can't they pick up a phone and make a call?" To be honest with you, Abby, I never dined on me that we were doing all the calling.

A few of my friends have the same problem, and we would all appreciate your answer. My husband reads your column every day, so please put your answer in the paper.

GRANDMA

DEAR GRANDMA: Question: Who is better able to pay for these long-distance calls? If it's not a strain on your budget, you might as well continue calling your children. On the other hand, if the kids can better afford it, they should call you.

Water ballet swims into Jerome

The Times-News

JEROME — Synchronized swimming, that Olympic sport that's the most arcane use of a swimming pool since Esther Williams climbed out of the water, is coming to Jerome.

The Jerome Recreation District will sponsor a water ballet show tonight at 8 at the pool on South Lincoln Street. It will feature 16 youngsters aged 5 through 19 swimming to various choreographed scores.

"I think people will enjoy it," said Jennifer Yeggy, the instructor. "It's beautiful to watch, and the kids have been working hard."

The music will come from various sources, Yeggy said, including "The Lion King."

Synchronized swimming evolved from the kind of choreography done for the famous MGM water musicals of the 1930s and '40s. It's been an Olympic sport since 1988, and the United States has dominated it, winning three of the four Olympic gold medals awarded.

Tonight's show is free and the public is invited. For more information, call Yeggy at 324-5400.

Even Stones aren't sure if they are on their final roll

Los Angeles Times

TORONTO — We're backstage at the RPM Club, deep in the heart of the Rolling Stones' inner circle, trying to answer the question hovering over every Stone: Is this the last time?

The band has been in town for a month, rehearsing for the mammoth tour that was to begin Monday in Washington, D.C., and the guest list for this warm-up date is filled with longtime friends and associates.

Among those eager to see the Stones in the intimate setting, comedian Dan Aykroyd, who hosted the group a few days earlier at his country estate near here, is a Rolling Stone magazine publisher. Jann Wenner, who flew here from New York to see what he still regards as the world's greatest rock band.

No one, including those who have been with the Stones since the beginning, is surprised by the question about whether this will be the last tour. Didn't a twentysomething Mick Jagger once say he couldn't imagine singing "Satisfaction" when he was 40?

It has been 31 years since the Stones began defining the renegade attitude in rock, and the band's co-founders — those who have survived — are all past 50 with the meter running. Bill Wyman, the bass player who is 57, called it quits last year.

"This is definitely the last time," says one insider, standing in the shadows near the crowded bar in the waterfront club's upstairs VIP area. "The only reason they haven't announced it is they think the idea of a farewell tour is tacky. ... They are trying to drum up one business by saying, 'See us before we are gone.'"

But that's an extreme view. Most of the others questioned feel the issue is more fluid.

"If age was going to intimidate them, they would have quit long ago," says one high-ranking member of the production team, standing by a rail overlooking the dance floor where 1,200 fans are restlessly awaiting the show. "It's not a lot of fun being called a wrinkly rocker, but they kind of take it as a badge of honor. They are intrigued with seeing how long they can keep going."

Ultimately, the answer has to come from the band members themselves.

Mick Jagger, who is 11 years past the once-dreaded 40, frowns when asked about the Stones' future. "Next question, please."

Dummer Charlie Watts, who is 53 is the oldest Stone, weighs the matter before politely saying, "Well, that's the big one, isn't it?"

Keith Richards, sitting alone in a backstage lounge area, sets down his beer and shrugs. Where Jagger likes to jest with the media in a teasing attempt to keep you away from the family secrets, Richards, 50, enjoys bringing you into the circle.

There's part of you that feels the Stones will be here forever, but you know that can't be," he says. "The truth is things were a lot more fragile for us during the '80s than anyone realized, including the band. It's only now that I can look back and see how close it came to coming apart."

Richards — whose bluesy guitar riffs on such hits as "Tumbling Dice" and "Honky Tonk Women" are as much milestones in rock as a great Dylan lyric — pauses to light a cigarette and look across the room at a guitar case.

Now that Bill has left, we are down to the hard core, aren't we? We are able to continue without him, but if anyone else decides he's had enough, that will be the end. "That uncertainty makes you (savor) every moment now ... even the rehearsals, because you don't know how much longer it'll last. One phone call, and it could all be over."

Twenty-four hours before the RPM show, the atmosphere is in the gymnasium of a private boys' school in suburban Toronto.

Given all the public squabbling between Jagger and Richards in the mid-'80s over Jagger's decision to make a solo album, it's disarming to see them so playful together — almost like brothers — in the rehearsal room.

Between songs, Jagger frequently walks over and puts his arm around Richards as they have a private chuckle. Watts, sitting behind the drum kit, chats with guitarist Ron Wood, 48, who joined the band in 1975. Adding to the family atmosphere is the fact that Richards' father is seated nearby, watching the whole thing.

Even the support musicians seem like family. Most, including saxophonist Bobby Keys and keyboardist Chuck Leavell, have toured with the band before. During a dinner break, the whole cast sits together with the crew in the school dining room rather than go to separate rooms. Video games and a large-screen TV are positioned nearby for relaxation.

"They have been very embracing, very warm," says bassist Darryl Jones, Wyman's replacement who formerly played with Miles Davis and STING. Jones, a 32-year-old Chicago native, has also worked in the studio with Eric Clapton and Madonna.

It wasn't always so harmonious. In all the media attention over the Richards-Jagger feud about their respective commitment to the band, an even greater threat to the Stones' future went largely

'I still can't imagine anything ever happening to the Stones. The attitude in the band is so strong now that we are like snarling tigers. If this is the last time, it's going to be a hell of a time.'

— Keith Richards, member of Rolling Stones unnoticed.

"I said over and over at the time, it wasn't just Keith and me," Jagger explains during the dinner break. "It was the whole band and people didn't believe it. They just wanted to talk about the two of us."

Wyman wanted out after the band's 1981 tour — agreeing to come back for a final tour only after constant urging from Jagger. Watts, too, thought about calling it quits at the time. The jazz-loving drummer has always been the most disgruntled Stone — the one who seemed furthest from the group's sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll image.

For years, he was almost invisible on the road — keeping away from interviews and the assorted tour hoopla. Even now, he stays at the band's headquarters hotel here rather than at private homes in the countryside like Jagger, Richards and Wood. It's less fuss, he says, and he avoids the 45-minute commute.

But Watts speaks easily now about his problems during the mid-'80s.

"I was pretty ill, for me, very ill ...

Rolling Stones singer Mick Jagger leads the band in their opening show of a 43-city tour Monday night at Washington's RFK stadium.

lots of drugs and lots of drink," he says, tugging at the crease in his sharply tailored trousers. "I nearly lost everything. I nearly lost my marriage, and the band as well through it."

It was only after he straightened out himself and the marriage that he agreed to go on the road again for the "Steel Wheels" tour.

Does he understand how Wyman could walk away from the most celebrated rock group in the world? "Sure, I know why Bill left," Watts says without hesitation. "He got fed up being on the road and in the studio. ... He wanted to spend the rest of his life, which he considers not very long now, 20 years maybe, at home."

And how does Watts feel now? "Before the tour, I asked myself if I wanted to stop now at the age of 53 and I thought that is a bit young," he replies. "The problem is I think that once you do stop, and you can afford to sit at home, you become a person that sits at home. You know what I mean?"

"Now, there is an awful lot to be said for that and I think (being home) at the moment, but I don't feel it was the right time. Maybe in a couple years' time."

Jagger, too, says he understands Wyman's decision. "He doesn't want to go through what I'm going to go through for the next year or so," he says straightforwardly in a separate interview.

'Voodoo Lounge' itinerary

The Rolling Stones' "Voodoo Lounge" tour kicked off Monday at RFK Stadium in Washington, D.C. As the Stones' 12th U.S. tour, so far, they've announced 22 shows in 16 U.S. cities and the number is expected to more than double.

Along the way they'll sell about 2.5 million tickets and gross up to $135 million. They're expected to go international next year and are expected to be seen by 3.5 million more.

school and think maybe next year." Like Richards, he agrees that the Stones would be over if Watts decided to stop. Short of that, what would tell him it is time?

"I have no idea," he says, somewhat wistfully. "I'm sure I'll know when I see it."

Of all the Stones, Richards appears the one pledged to rock on forever. It's ironic because he once seemed like everybody's best bet in the "ghoul pools" that speculated on who would be most likely to join Janis Joplin and Jimi Hendrix as rock casualties.

The memory of those wild days is on Richards' mind in Toronto, because it was here that he was arrested for heroin possession and faced a seven-year prison sentence. He was finally sentenced in 1978 to one year's probation and ordered to give two benefit concerts.

In the dressing room of the RPM, Richards recalls that time.

"I guess I hit the bar at the right time," he says of the incident. "It just happened to be here. It could have happened anywhere. For me, it turned out to be the kick in the ass that I needed. I realized I was screwing my family and the band."

"I knew what seven years of hard time meant and I wasn't going to enjoy it, but I knew it wasn't fair to everybody else. That was too much to bear ... enough for me to shake out of it."

Unlike Jagger and Watts, Richards shrugs when asked if he ever thinks of hanging up his rock 'n' roll shoes. Even if the Stones call it quits, he says, he'll continue, probably with the Winos, the band he put together in 1988 for his first solo album.

He seems wistful, though, at the thought of the Stones' last days. His mood brightens as the club doors open and he hears the excitement of the crowd as they race for positions near the stage.

"I still can't imagine anything ever happening to the Stones," he says. "The attitude in the band is so strong now that we are like snarling tigers. If this is the last time, it's going to be a hell of a time."

Late-blooming artist sketches Idaho

By Steve Crump
Times-News writer

MURTAUGH — It all started, as it sometimes does for artists, with a gift of oil paints.

Joan Sargent, busy raising her family and helping her husband, Bill, run their Murtaugh-area farm, took time where she could find it to dabble in what she calls her "representational" art.

"I began by painting landscapes," she said. "Eventually, I moved to watercolors and then pen and ink, and that's what I'm enjoying now."

Sargent, who will have her works on display at Art in the Park this weekend in Twin Falls, heads for the mountains and meadows of the Magic and Wood-River valleys and the Camas Prairie every spring with what she calls her sketchbook — a camera — to shoot flowers and vistas.

Sometimes her subjects go on paper as soon as the photos come back from the drugstore, but not always.

"I have taken photos, especially of landscapes, and just put them away for a while," she said. "When I bring them out again, sometimes that scene is gone forever. That happens quite often in the Wood River Valley."

Sargent, whose works are shown in Wood River Valley galleries and elsewhere, says the precision workmanship required of a pen-and-ink artist appeals to her.

"With watercolors, sometimes you'll get a happy accident that people love, but pen-and-ink takes a lot of care and thought."

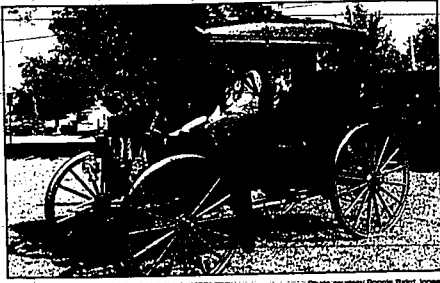

Now 57, Sargent has never taken an art class, but her work is in demand. She'd eventually like to start painting and sketching animals and people, but her first love is Idaho's high, lonesome outdoors.

"I enjoy getting outside with a camera and exploring," she said.

Her husband is a wood turner, but so far none of her three children or five grandchildren have evinced much interest in doing the same.

"They've got plenty of time. Neither did Joan for a long while."

"I liked to draw when I was growing up, but I never got serious about it until I grew up," she said.

'Major League II' hits shelves

The Times-News

The Cleveland Indians, who won the American League East Division "last season," are being picked to repeat and, perhaps, even win the AL championship this time around.

OK, these are the fictional Indians whose second-half stretch run, sparked by the arm of Rick "Wild Thing" Vaughn, won the division in the movie "Major League."

And now comes the sequel, "Major League II." Not quite as funny as the original, "Major League II" still has its moments (although some are predictable) and fans of the first entry should enjoy seeing the "progress" of the team.

Charlie Sheen is back as "Wild Thing" but it's obvious during spring training that he's gone through a transformation. No longer sporting his crazy haircut, Vaughn reports to spring training somewhat tamer with a well-groomed head and in a business suit.

It's also obvious that the success of the previous season also has brought changes to his teammates. Base-stealing ace Willie Mays Hayes (Omar Epps) is more interested in the acting career (playing a Rambo-type character) he began during the off-season than he is baseball.

Cuban slugger Pedro Cerrano (Dennis Haysbert) has found religion in Buddhism and has become a gentle soul. In one sequence, when his base hit knocks a bird out of the air, several other states have indicated plans to participate. About 100 antique, vintage and classic vehicles will be shown in the south park on Main Street. There are also truck and antique tractor classes.

The show will open at 9 a.m. on Saturday, Aug. 13, and Sunday, Aug. 14, and continues until 5 p.m. each day. Cars can be viewed until dark Sunday.

Several other car clubs will bring displays. Classic 7-birds of Idaho plans a Sunday showing of the 1955 through 1957 "Little birds." Magic Valley Early Iron will be represented. The Chevy club's entries include a large number of Model-T Fords and other cars from the '20s.

Craft booths will be located in the north half of the park. The Chevy club will operate the hamburger grill and other refreshments are available in the south park. Swappers will be in the east end of the south park with hard-to-find old-car parts and automobiles.

Video releases

Cerrano runs to aid the fallen fowl rather than run the bases. His humane action costs the Indians a win.

Corbin Bernsen is back as Roger Dorn, an aging third baseman in the first film who now owns the team. The only one who seems to be his old self is catcher Jake Taylor (Tom Berenger), who finds himself in the role of rookie manager when veteran manager Lou Brown (James Gammon) suffers a heart attack.

New to the roster is Rube, a rookie catcher played by Eric Bruskottier and Japanese standout Tunaika, played by Takashi Ishibashi. Also on the roster is the arrogant Jack Parkman (David Keith), who eventually is traded during the season to an enemy ballclub. That fact plays a big part in the film's climax.

Also in the around-the-bench again is former major leaguer Bob Uecker, who portrays the Indians' play-by-play announcer, Harry Doyle.

Will the Indians win the pennant? You can probably guess the outcome, but this is still a lot of fun. Warner Home Video is releasing the film for the rental trade. (Knight-Ridder Newspapers) (Video West, Blockbuster).

Also: Blockbuster: "Angie," "Barney: Live in New York City," "The Chase," Video West: "The Chase," "Angie."

Art guild show

The Art Guild of Magic Valley's 35th annual juried show and sale is scheduled for Saturday and Sunday in City Park in Twin Falls.

The show will run from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Saturday and from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on Sunday.

Dozens of artists will display their works, but each will submit one piece to be considered for judging. First, second and third prizes will be awarded.

Musical entertainment on Saturday will include a Scottish bagpipe performance. On Sunday, Bob Nor's band will play jazz. A variety of concessions will be available.

Woodstock '94: Blessing or burden?

On the 25th anniversary of a concert defining a generation, promoters still wonder SAUGERTIES, N.Y. (AP) — Paradise revisited or a rock 'n' roll prison camp. It all depends on your point of view.

Twenty-five years after the concert that defined a generation, promoters planning the sequel are both blessed and burdened by the Woodstock Mystique.

Memories of the 1969 festival have so much cachet that this year's show on a farm two hours north of New York City promises to be the biggest rock event since Live Aid. The music starts at noon on Friday, Aug. 12, and probably won't end until early Monday morning.

The diverse lineup includes the country-folk of Johnny Cash and the angry noise of Nine Inch Nails, with just about everything in between — reggae, rap and Dylan.

But promoters have faced complaints about expensive tickets: a lineup short of star power and limitations on ticketholder behavior.

And in an area that takes its 1960s values seriously, there's endless grumbling that a lust for profits has eroded that undefinable mystique.

"It's almost as if people have this impression that Woodstock was born that morning — on Friday morning — and everything sort of appeared in a field," sighed Michael Lang, partner in Woodstock Ventures, who helped organize both shows.

The Saugerties show is one of several musical tributes to Woodstock in the crowded Catskills Mountain region.

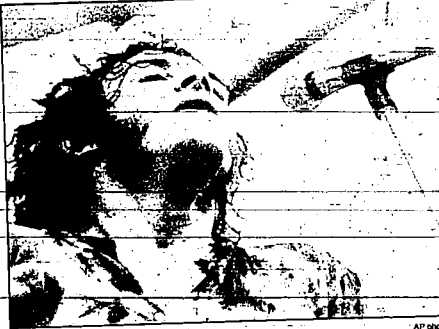

A nostalgia concert, featuring several of the original Woodstock performers, is planned for the Bethel, N.Y., field where the 1969 festival took place. Promoters hope to sell 50,000 tickets.

An informal group that has been marking the Woodstock anniversary every year with an impromptu party said it will hold a free concert, also in Bethel, which will stretch over a 10-day period.

But Woodstock '94, about an hour away from Bethel on country back roads, is the Big Event.

Scheduled performers appeal mostly to an early '70s audience, although Woodstock originals Joe Cocker, Santana and Crosby, Stills and Nash will return. Bob Dylan, the voice of the '60s who missed the first Woodstock, is coming to the reunion.

Metallica, Aerosmith and the Red

Singer Joe Cocker performs at the Woodstock Music and Art Fair in Bethel, N.Y. Cocker will be singing at the Woodstock anniversary concert in Saugerties, N.Y., this month.

Hot Chili Peppers are all strong sell, and Green Day may be the country's hottest young act.

Yet Woodstock lacks a huge drawing card. U2 is currently on hiatus. R.E.M. hasn't toured in years. Pearl Jam is locked in a battle with Ticketmaster, the agency selling Woodstock tickets. The Grateful Dead didn't like the first Woodstock, and say they're not coming back.

'It's almost as if people have this impression that Woodstock was born that morning — on Friday morning — and everything sort of appeared in a field.'

— Michael Lang, organizer of both shows

The Rolling Stones are performing in New York City that weekend, but have said they're not interested in Woodstock.

"It doesn't look like they booked their talent to reach a particular market," said Ray Ploutz, a 38-year-old music fan from Shokan, N.Y., who doesn't plan to attend Woodstock. "It's sort of looks like they tried to appeal to everyone and may wind up appealing to nobody."

The ticket price is $135 — a relative bargain for a three-day show, considering that the Eagles are charging more than $100 for a three-hour performance. But fans wanting to come by car must buy tickets in blocks of four and get one parking pass, which makes it a tough sell.

They'll find far more than the muddy field of 1969, with the meticulous plans showing how much the rock 'n' roll business has changed in 25 years.

In addition to two concert stages operating simultaneously, fans can visit a "Surreal Field" filled with interactive games and an "Eco-village" with environmental and political activism booths.

Everything from camping equipment to condoms to corn on the cob will be on sale. There also will be automatic teller machines conveniently located for people who run out of money.

Fans are being asked not to bring in their own food, and alcohol is prohibited. They will be allowed to leave the festival grounds only once.

These and other restrictions have angered some people. Many have been venting complaints to Woodstock Online, a computer network for anniversary news, said Lenore Benefield, one of its operators.

roll prison camp, a complaint echoed by a Woodstock resident.

"People from all over the world will think they're walking into some miracle happening of 1969," said John Godsey, a landscaper from Woodstock. "But what they're walking into is some sort of compound situation — a prison compound."

Godsey has printed and distributed T-shirts that depict a "Woodstock occupied" sign surrounded by barbed wire.

Many fans also are planning to show up without tickets, perhaps recalling "how the original Woodstock turned into a free show when the multitudes overwhelmed authorities and stormed the field. Needless to say, promoters have been strongly discouraging the no-ticket plan.

Promoters also appear weary of criticism that they are no longer true to the Woodstock spirit.

"They're looking at this through a '60s mentality," Lang said. "That's fine, but you're living in a 1990s reality. Either you have the show or you don't. You can weigh it down with these perceptions or you can just enjoy the fact that it's here and not worry so much about having an attitude."

Publicity stunt or true love?

Newsday

Either it's one of the great publicity stunts of all time, or true love. The aftermath from the bombshell that dropped earlier this week—that Michael Jackson, 35, and Lisa Marie Presley, 26, have wedded in what might be the Nuptials of the Nineties—has yet to be measured, and all kinds of questions remain to be answered.

What about kids? (Presley is already the mother of two, and she's announced that "we both look forward to raising a family.")

- Why did Jackson's publicists continue to lie about the wedding, weeks after it happened?
- How does Elizabeth Taylor feel about the marriage?
- Will they live in Graceland or Neverland?
- Will Bubbles, Michael's chimpanzee, grow jealous?

- Will the honeymoon divert public attention from a criminal investigation of Jackson's alleged sexual molestation of a 13-year-old boy?
- Will Jackson's new album, due in November, sell?

One question that might be put to rest now is Elvis Presley's alive-or-dead status. A confirmed fan of King, one of the hundreds to congregate in front of Trump Tower in New York City, where the newlyweds are ensconced in a duplex, said Elvis "would roll over in his grave" if he knew about his daughter's choice. Well, rest in peace, King.

The Jackson-Presley marriage is surely this most sensational—and unlikely—pop alliance in a decade.

It dwarfs the Lyle Lovett-Julia Roberts affair and has the news-making potential of Liz Taylor and Richard Burton. The story, though, goes beyond romance, and part of it belongs on the business pages.

The union effectively consolidates a chunk of music-publishing history, since it puts the catalogs of Elvis Presley, Jackson, and the Beatles (which Jackson bought several years ago) under one roof. Jackson produced "Thriller," which has sold more than 40 million copies, and he has been proclaimed the biggest-selling recording artist ever.

For months, rumors about the alleged tryst provided grist for the tabloid mills. In her statement issued Monday by MJJ Productions, Presley-Jackson said secrecy was maintained "for several reasons; foremost being that we are both very private people living in the glare of the public media."

Even after the story broke July 11 on the front page of a Santo Domingo newspaper—confirmed by the Dominican Republic judge who married the two in late May—the Jackson camp denied it. "There was no marriage," said spokesman Lee Solters. He said it again and again.

As early as February, the couple was seen together at Jackson's Neverland ranch in California. Even though Lisa Marie reportedly slept in a separate guest house, she and Jackson were seen chatting on a patio and kissing good night.

The May 26 wedding—coming three weeks after Presley divorced musician Danny Keough and began a joint custody arrangement for their children—

Benjamin, 11, and Danielle, 5—was first planned for May 18, but was postponed a shade because of political problems in the Dominican Republic.

The judge, Hugo Alvarez Perez, told reporters that he married the couple in Spanish in his private residence in front of two witnesses and two of Jackson's bodyguards. According to an interview in the Sunday Times of London, Alvarez said Jackson was wearing a shade of lipstick more vivid than his bride's.

Jackson said "I when asked whether he would take Presley to be his wife, and the two kissed."

The pair is expected to stay in a Trump Tower duplex through the summer. Their suite is directly under Donald Trump's apartment. Trump, who reportedly put up the pair at his Palm Beach, Fla., estate for a week, has said Jackson and Presley-Jackson are "nice people and I wish them luck."

Whether or not they're nice, they're certainly rich.

"Between the two of them, Michael and his new bride own every piece of music ever recorded," offered the Boston Globe's Patricia Smith, giving in to a whiff of hyperbole. "In one hour, Graceland pulls in more money selling vinyls of Elvis' sweat than most of us will make in our lifetimes."

The out-of-this-world wedding news—something we've become accustomed to hearing from the Jackson camp—also comes three months before the release of "History: His Story," a double compact-disc set that will include several new songs as well as a compilation of the Gloved One's greatest hits. Sources say Jackson is still working on the project, but shifting Jackson's publicity from negative to positive may be effective in greasing the promotional chute for the new album.

In addition to reawakening Jackson, the marriage may also revive the artistic aspirations of Presley-Jackson, who flooded a demo tape some years back to no avail. Her new husband owns the MJJ label.

The marriage may also help boost business at Graceland (Lisa Marie is the sole heir to her father's estate, valued at about $100 million). A spokeswoman for the mansion said that visitors were lined up to walk through the Convair 880 four-engine jet that's on the grounds of Graceland. It was Elvis' private plane. The America continues to question motives behind the wedding of singer Michael Jackson and Lisa Marie Presley, daughter of Elvis Presley and lone heir to her father's $100 million estate.

Sandler's presence floats Airheads

Orange County Register

To help you plan your movie-going. Hot Previews irreverently looks at coming films and what might be expected of them based on early reviews, media coverage and track records of those involved. The following are scheduled to open Aug. 5-5:

What's Hot

Office. Phillip Noyce directs. Outlook: Follow-up to "Patriot Games." Not expected to be a big success.

"Airheads." Who's in it? Adam Sandler, Brendan Fraser, Steve Buscemi

What it's about? Members of a struggling rock band take over a radio station to get some airplay. Aren't there laws against this kind of thing? Outlook: Sandler's "Saturday Night Live" presence theoretically delivers a presold audience, and Fraser on the cast list should help, too. But is the movie any good? Early word is not encouraging.

"The Little Rascals"

Who's in it? Travis Telford, Bug Hall, Kevin Woods—basically unknowns playing some of the best-known kids in film history.

What it's about? Universal remakes the much-beloved Hal Roach "Our Gang" comedies of 60 years ago, with a modern slant and feminist overtones. Are there no new ideas in Hollywood?

Who's in it? "Weiner's World" Spencer directed. Outlook: Guess no one told Universal that MGM at its peak failed badly at making "Our Gang" comedies when it took over production from Roach in the late 1930s. So what chance is there of duplicating their clump today?

'Doom' nears virtual reality

By Vox Day
Knight-Ridder Newspapers.

TITLE: Doom
FORMAT: DOS PC 386/333+
PUBLISHER: Id Software
PRICE: Shareware, $40 for registered levels

RECOMMENDED AGES: 16 and older

If you haven't heard of Doom yet, then you probably don't play computer games. Doom is far and away the best game yet developed, on the PC or any other platform. It's a three-dimensional, first-person, point-of-view action game that is the closest thing to virtual reality I've seen. After an hour or two of Doom, you'll find it hard to remember what planet you're on.

The plot is pretty simple, kind of "Alien 2" meets "Friday the 13th." The strategy is simple too: If it moves, kill it. You're provided with plenty of weapons to use, ranging from bare fists and pistols to rocket launchers and chainsaws. The graphics are stunning; the gameplay is awesome, and the sound effects are remarkably realistic.

But the coolest part about the game is the multi-player options. You can play against up to three others via network, modem or direct serial link. Cooperation can be fun, but nothing compares with the thrill of going head to head in a Deathmatch showdown.

Unfortunately for PC-owning parents, this is probably not a game you'll want your kids playing. If you thought Mortal Kombat was bad, you'll be completely appalled by Doom. Demons vomit blood as they're ripped apart by chainsaws, humans evaporate in a bloody red mist when hit by rockets, and occult symbolism runs rampant. And if you have to ask what the "BFG" stands for, you probably don't want to know.

All of this notwithstanding, Doom is the current ultimate in electronic entertainment. Be careful though, since Doom is very addictive (that's why they let you get hooked with a shareware version), and word is that Doom II: Hell on Earth will be out Oct. 10 with six new monsters, 27 harder levels and lots more blood.

(Technical hint: If Doom won't run and you get an error message saying that you don't have enough DPMI memory, run out the SMARTDRV line in your AUTOEXEC.BAT file.)

Bowing once sign of submission

Q. I know the handshake dates back to when a warrior held out his weapon hand to show it was empty. But what did bowing from the waist grow out of?

Ford clearly pulls movie out of danger

Dallas Morning News

Harrison Ford's entrance in "Clear and Present Danger" tells you everything you need to know. A door opens and there he is—granite face, wry smile, furrowed brow and head tilted at just the most appealing angle. The basic premise of Ford as a reluctant and skeptical hero is fine, but such accessories as the bemused smile and the tilt of the head seem too cute. The pose is effective but prepackaged, which just about sums up the movie itself.

Loosely adapted from Tom Clancy's novel, "Clear and Present Danger," Ford's "Patriot Games" in bringing Ford's Jack Ryan into dangerous zones when he really just wants to stay home with wife and kids. But this time the family is left in the background as Jack's legendary global implications. This CIA mentor, played by James Earl Jones, is hospitalized with cancer just as he's making inroads in combating a Colombian drug cartel. Jack assumes his boss's duties, only to learn that the drug trafficking involves an extremely high-placed Washington power broker. Hovering over it all, looking like a noisy head in the extraordinarily pompous U.S. president, played by Donald Moffat, this decade's voice of avuncular propriety ("Regarding Henry," "Housesitter"). The movie could make some political VIPs nervous. Moffat embellishes the role of the commander-in-chief with a few George Bush mannerisms, while the plot's depiction of a covert war against the drug cartel echoes the Iran-Contra affair. Under Philip Noyce's direction, "Clear and Present Danger" is blessed with some stirring chase scenes, gloriously photogenic explosions and even a sequence of computer warfare that's not only dynamic but also taps into our modern dependency on software.

But the film is burdened with a sense of deja vu, of merely going through the paces, albeit in a slick and professional manner. For the first time in his career, Ford's reluctant hero routine seems tired. The actor's signature passivity usually sets him apart from other action heroes, making him more of an Everyman. But in "Clear and Present Danger," he's initially too bewildered to invite our empathy. As Ryan begins to grasp the situation, Ford's performance becomes more authoritative, and not a moment too soon. Amidst all the coat-and-tie protocol of Washington, D.C., hostilities, Willem Dafoe's irreverence is doubly refreshing. His role as a former CIA operative, now a covert warrior against Colombian drug traffic, is the most forceful in the crowd, excepting only the movie would benefit from more interaction between Dafoe and Ford. The former is craggy; the latter pure granite. And the two mix surprisingly well. Movie newcomer Henry Czerny makes a fine, oily Washington villain, while Ann Magnuson has several memorable moments as a nervous, loveable D.C. secretary whose private life clearly spells trouble. Anne Archer is given cursory footage, at best, as Ryan's wife. The screenplay dutifully mentions that she's a successful doctor in her own right, although you'll wonder when she finds time to practice, considering all the political functions she must attend. Intentionally intriguing, "Clear and Present Danger" is heavy on plot but needs more of the type of spontaneity provided by Dafoe's provocative leer. Noyce's direction is strong enough to keep you guessing what's going to happen next, even if you're not quite sure you'll understand it when it occurs. But the pacing is surprisingly languid. If it moved faster, the film would have the urgency of a stirring expose rather than the careful construction of a comfortable thriller. (Twin Cinema)

Harrison Ford, shown here in "The Fugitive," assumes more than his bosses' responsibilities in his new thriller, "Clear and Present Danger."

'The Little Rascals' scamper to area theatres

The Los Angeles Times

Movies playing in the Twin Falls area this week. Ratings are by the Motion Picture Association of America and reviews are by the Los Angeles Times.

"The Little Rascals" (PG). Those unforgettable knee-high sneakers have been recast for the '90s. Penelope Spheeris directs the brand-new exploits of Spanky, Alfalfa, Buckwheat, Darla and the rest of the gang. (Twin Cinema, Jerome Cinema.)

"Airheads" (PG-13). Director Michael Lehmann shrugs off "Hudson Hawk" and offers up this wacky comedy concerning three metalheads who take a radio station hostage to get their record on the air. Brendan Fraser, Steve Buscemi, Adam Sandler and Chris Farley star. (Twin Cinema.)

"Angels in the Outfield" (PG). This Disney remake of a 1951 MGM baseball fantasy is best when it's goofy—worst when it's preachy. The 11-year-old Roger (Joseph Gordon-Levitt) sees angels where nobody else can. They help drive his favorite ball club, the California Angels, to pennant contention. Danny Glover stars as the Angels' gruff but—natch—kindly manager who begins to see things Roger's way. Enjoyable but uninspired. (Twin Cinema.)

"Black Beauty" (G). "Edward Scissorhands" scribe Caroline Thompson writes and directs her version of the Anna Sewell classic. Sean Bean and David Thewlis show us a time when horses were an integral part of people's lives. (Twin Cinema.)

Movie capsules

"The Client" (PG-13). Not particularly nuanced or finely tuned, this latest John Grisham novel to reach the screen benefits from fine starring performances from Susan Sarandon and Tommy Lee Jones. Though much of what is seen isn't particularly convincing, its story of an 11-year-old boy in mortal danger from the mob does have the trademark Grisham quality of making us care how it all turns out. (Twin Cinema, Jerome Cinema.)

"Forest Gump" (PG-13). Director Robert Zemeckis uses the story of a holy fool whose IQ of 75 doesn't stop him from succeeding in life as a way to examine the turbulent recent decades of American history through a genuinely cracked lens. In part a lovely piece of work, with marvelous special effects and a solid performance from Tom Hanks, it stumbles when it forces its charm in search of obvious sentimentality and grand points about society. (Mall Cinema.)

"I Love Trouble" (PG). An understated stab at the kind of romantic thriller Alfred Hitchcock used to excel at, Julia Roberts and Nick Notte star as rascally newspaper reporters with eyes for each other as well as the same big plot, but even their star power can't compensate for inept thrills and a lack of panache to the dialogue. (Grand-Vu Drive-In.)

"It Could Happen to You" (PG). Nicolas Cage is the cop and Bridget Fonda the waitress who is promised half a lottery ticket by the admiring man in blue. Robert Perez plays Cage's materialistic wife, and she's incensed to learn that her husband has given away a fortune. Andrew Bergman directs. (Twin Cinema.)

"The Lion King" (G). The side-kicks steal the show in this latest animated extravaganza from Disney. From a trio of laughing hyenas to a hysterical warthog-meerkat combination, they provide the energy and enthusiasm that the film's nominal center, the story of a young cub's growth to adulthood after the parents take note on-screen death of his father, cannot manage. (Twin Cinema.)

"The Mask" (PG-13). Jim Carrey stars as a banal bank clerk who becomes a magical, charismatic hero when he dons an ancient mask. Industrial Light & Magic provides Carrey's scary shots. (Twin Cinema, Jerome Cinema.)

"North" (PG). Normally a shrill warning of what audiences like, director Rob Reiner's instincts have led him astray in this feeble fantasy, about an 11-year-old boy who decides he's too good for his parents and sets out to look for his new ones. (Grand-Vu Drive-In.)

"Speed" (R). A crackjack action film with an intriguing premise: SWAT team stalwart Keanu Reeves must keep a Santa Monica bus from slowing down or it will explode. Though the drama is not to brag about, first-time director Jan De Bont displays a true flair for action. Nothing here hasn't been done before, but De Bont and company make it feel fresh and exciting. (Motor-Vu Drive-In.)

"True Lies" (R). Writer-director James Cameron certainly knows a lot about action, and the stunt in this Arnold Schwarzenegger epic about a secret agent whose work is a secret to his family are once again state-of-the-art. But even though Cameron and company are also adept at the romantic spoof aspects of the story, the film suffers from a strain of crudeness and mean-spirited humiliation, especially toward women. (Twin Cinema, Jerome Cinema.)

Rift between author, Paramount could stymie Jack Ryan movies

New York Daily News

The Cold War is over for everybody but Tom Clancy—and Paramount Pictures, and unless somebody arranges a truce, Jack Ryan may never appear on screen again.

Ryan, the high-tech, gun-ho hero of seven Clancy novels, makes his third movie appearance in "Clear and Present Danger," which opens Wednesday, and Paramount is anxious to hear what Clancy thinks.

For now, says one source, relations between Clancy and Paramount are on hold. Make that once.

Put simply, Clancy reportedly wants more creative input and a piece of the box office action. He also thinks Harrison Ford, who is too old to play Ryan, who is thirty-something.

"The guy spent a year writing the book," says one source, "and if he's not happy, he's entitled to say it. In his mind, he would like Hollywood to consist of that." Paramount is holding its ground, but the studio is holding its ground to the right to a first look at novels starring Ryan but does not give Clancy script input. The relationship has grown so chilly that if Paramount does not agree to some of Clancy's demands, sources say, he will not sell the studio the rights to any more books.

Clancy already has struck a deal with another studio, Savoy Pictures, to film "Without Remorse," his only novel not featuring Ryan. But production has not begun and there is no word when it will.

Clancy was reasonably happy with "Red October," which earned nearly $100 million at the box office. "They didn't screw it up too much," he said at the time.

Paramount decided to follow up with "Patriot Games," but when Alec Baldwin said he did not want to play Ryan again, Ford replaced him.

Clancy hated the "Games" script, complaining that the movie bore little resemblance to his story about Irish terrorists trying to kill Ryan. In a version scuttled the book's opening scene, an attack on Prince Charles and Princess Diana.

He upset director Philip Noyce so much with suggestions and complaints (some of his memos ran as long as 14 single-spaced pages) that Brandon Tartikoff, then Paramount's top executive, flew to Clancy's Maryland home to placate him.

Clancy declared a ceasefire. "I've made peace with these guys," he said. "I want peace between us." He also said he looked forward to more films with Paramount.

Then last October, when talk about filming Clancy's blockbuster "The Sum of All Fears" began, the "Cold War" broke out again.

"Communications with Paramount have broken down for the most part," said Clancy's agent, Robert Gottlieb. "They have to look at him not as a writer-for-hire but as a partner in the process."

As a result, he said, Clancy would rather see "Sum" collect dust than give Paramount the right to film it. Clancy isn't talking. He is out of the country, publicists say, and unavailable for phone calls. Paramount is silent, too.

"Why rock the boat?" a publicist says. "Anyway, these guys could kiss and make up tomorrow. It's that kind of world."

Tower of Power: Funky after all these years

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

SUN VALLEY — Known as a "brilliant funk band," Tower of Power performs a tight, tough live show.

The adrenaline shoots through numbers like "Soul with a Capital S," "I'll Come Back" and "Please Come Back to Stay," critics say.

Other songs, like "Come to a Decision" and "You," said to astrophysics listeners with originality, invention, heavy rhythm and general music mayhem.

"Tower of Power has been melting down musical categories since bursting onto the Bay Area club scene and releasing a debut album, "East Bay Grease," in 1971. Signing with Warner Brothers in 1972, Tower cut its first hit, "You're Still a Young Man." It was the song that shot the group to fame.

Tower of Power was founded in 1968 in Oakland, Calif., by Emilio Castillo and Stephen "Doc" Kupka, with Greg Adams and Francis "Rocca" Prestia.

Castillo, the son of Greek and Mexican parents, formed a soul band, the Motown, when he was only 17. Kupka, the son of a California physician, became "The Funky Doctor" when he picked up the baritone sax and teamed up with Castillo. Adams, the son of Salvation Army missionaries, chose Tower of Power over the Berkeley School of Music. Prestia makes an annual appearance at the Bass Institute of Los Angeles, during "Rocco Prestia Week."

Today, guitarist Carmen Grillo, drummer Russ McKinnon, keyboardist Nick Milo and bassist Prestia form a balanced unit. The horn section, led by Adams and Lee Thornburg along with saxophonists Kupka and Castillo, allow the music to breathe and the phrases to soar.

The group's latest album, T.O.P., has been labeled "rude, greasy, seductive and romantic."

In the words of Castillo, "I wouldn't call T.O.P. a thinking man's album. It's more like a feeling man's album. We just dug deep down, and this is what we came up with."

Tower of Power will perform at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday at the Sun Valley Music Festival on the Trail Creek Cabin grounds. Tickets, priced at $18 general admission for non-Sun Valley Center members and $6 for non-members who are 12 and under, are available at Sun Valley ticket outlets or by calling 726-9491.

Did death save Hank Williams?

Chicago Tribune

Hank Williams was 29 years old, with three No. 1 country hits under his belt, when he died in the back seat of his Cadillac on New Year's Day in 1953 en route to a show in West Virginia. Some folks say it was the best career move he could have made.

In terms of forging a legend, he could have done no better than to burn out at 29 before his fire grew dim and the face of country music changed, author Colin Escott observes in "Hank Williams: The Biography" (Little, Brown, $22.95), an evenhanded, perceptive new reassessment of country's most enduring icon. "By arriving when he did and dying when and how he did, he became a prophet with honor."

Indeed, had Williams — born in 1923 in Alabama — begun his career a few years earlier, he probably would have languished in obscurity. Had he not succumbed to a combination of alcohol, morphine and the sedative chloral hydrate when he did, chances are that his career would have taken a "sedative" with the advent of rock-and-roll.

Superstardom is often in large part a matter of an entertainer's talents meshing felicitously with emerging social and market conditions, and Williams undoubtedly benefited from country (or "hillbilly") music's rising popularity with urban audiences in the late 1940s. But it was the heartfelt conviction Williams conveyed in his songs of love and loneliness, his ability to chronicle the peaks and valleys of everyday life in down-to-earth terms, that continue to captivate listeners more than four decades after his death.

But who was the weak and self-destructive man behind the myth? Details of Williams' early life and career are relatively sketchy. Friends and relatives remember young Hank as christened Hiram, after a biblical king — as a scrawny kid with a surprisingly strong voice and an equally strong desire for a singing career.

His father, Lon, a sometime farmer and lumberman, was in and out of veterans' hospitals and often absent from home. His mother, Lillie, was a tough-as-nails type who fostered her son's interest in music.

By the early 1940s, Williams had dropped out of school and was performing in Alabama dance halls. By 1945, he had embarked upon a tempestuous marriage with his first wife, Audrey, who squabbled with Lillie over the path Hank's career should take and wanted to be a singer herself. He also had been unsuccessfully treated "an Alabama sanitarium" for the alcoholism that already had rendered him professionally unreliable.

Escott suggests that Williams turned to booze and later to drugs to dull the pain of chronic degenerative back problems, as well as to relieve stress. Whatever the cause of his substance abuse, the effects were obvious, as both his personal and professional lives spiraled increasingly out of control.

Williams' relatively brief years at the top of the country charts began in 1949, when "Loveless Blue" became a No. 1 hit and catapulted him to stardom around the time Audrey was taking an ice pick to the tires of his car in retaliation for his bouts of drinking and philandering. The couple divorced in July 1952, but Williams' messy relationships with women didn't end there. Even as he was selling tickets to his second marriage — around 14,000 people paid $1 to $2.80 to watch Williams wed Billie Jean Jones a few months later — New Orleans' Municipal Auditorium friend Bobbie Jett was six months pregnant and demanding some sort of settlement.

Escott chronicles the highs and lows of Williams' mostly sad and self-destructive life "in well-researched detail, telling the singer's story in the context of the newly emerging country music industry. For fans of the man and his music, "Hank Williams" makes for informative reading.

Impressive start may lead Undhjem to 16th Amateur

By Larry Hovey
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Twin Falls' Virginia Undhjem got off to a fast start toward her 16th Magic Valley Women's Amateur golf championship Thursday.

"I played pretty well today. You wouldn't have recognized Virginia," said the leader after posting a one-under-73 at Canyon Springs golf course and build a six-shot lead the earnings into today's final round.

"The thing that made the sub-par total impressive is that she had a seven and a six on her score card — but only the seven was a double bogey."

"It's difficult to overcome a double bogey. Normally I don't get a lot of birdies but today I had three on the back nine," Undhjem said.

The double came on the ninth hole — a par five — and it was the base of the lead championship flight group. Among Undhjem, Shauna Robinson, Elizabeth Fennen and Amanda Patterson, only Patterson didn't have a seven.

"I was playing and praying for a bogey," Undhjem said, "but my putt tipped out for my six."

Robinson, a former champion, had a double and triple on the front nine to just about ruin her hopes for the title.

"I tripled the second hole and then doubled No. 9," she said, noting after that a lot of the suspense went out of the tournament for her.

Patterson, who won the title last year, saw her chances to repeat dwindle to little more than mathematical as she carded a 10-over 84.

"It wasn't a good day," she understated, noting two shanks didn't help.

Canyon Springs' favorite Chris Sterling carded a 39 coming in to move into second place at 79 while Sergeant Jensen of Rupert had an 80 for third.

"Nothing spectacular, just very consistent — 40-40-80," Jensen said. "I'm happy."

Kay Feldman blazed around in 81 to take the first flight lead by two over Bernice Howa of Twin Falls.

The tournament will conclude today with the field holding a 9 a.m. shotgun start which will allow all participants to attend the awards luncheon.

Russian wins in figure skating

U.S. competitor places 2nd in event at Goodwill Games

The Associated Press

ST. PETERSBURG, Russia — Order was restored at the Goodwill Games on Thursday, as the Russian figure skater skated and the Russians ruled.

After days of confusion and wrangling over the figure skating venue, the competition finally got under way at the Yubileiny Sports Palace — and it all went off without a hitch.

"It's been a waiting game, wondering when we're going to compete, what day and what time," U.S. skater Todd Eldredge said. "It's finally good to get going."

Eldredge, a former two-time U.S. champion, had a strong performance to place second after the men's technical program, behind 1994 Olympic champion Alexei Urmanov of Russia. France's Philippe Candeloro, silver medalist at the Olympics, was in third.

Eldredge, who landed a triple-axel-double toe loop combination, scored mostly with 5.75 and 5.85 and had one 5.9 for presentation. Skating to upbeat music that included "Don't Get Around Much Anymore," Eldredge showed a more playful presence on the ice than ever before.

"It's the first time I've done that program in competition, so for the first time out that's pretty good," he said. "I just felt it was time to go for a change. We tried to bring a different personality on the ice. It's not so serious as before. It's sort of happy-go-lucky. And being right behind the Olympic champion is fine with me."

Natalia Mishkutienok and Artur Dmitriev, the 1992 Olympic champions from Russia, led after the pairs technical program. Current world champions Evgenia Shishkova and Vadim Naumov were in second, with another Russian pair, Marina Eltsova and Andrei Bushkov, in third.

In the ice dance, Irina Romanova and Igor Yaroshenko of Ukraine were in the lead after the compulsory.

All in all, it was a good night for the locals. Urmanov, along with Mishkutienok and Dmitriev, all live in St. Petersburg and train at the same Yubileiny rink.

"It feels great here," said Tamara Moskvina, who coaches Dmitriev and Mishkutienok. "It feels like a vacation."

But the real star of the day might have been a local chemistry professor named Germain Sergeyevich Potehin. He's the man who finally managed to get the ice rink to freeze.

Players stick to Aug. 12 strike date

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Union chief Donald Fehr calmed angry players Thursday and convinced them to stick to their Aug. 12 strike date rather than walk out immediately.

Fehr said up to 10 teams took straw polls following management's failure to make a pension payment of $7.8 million and that many favored an immediate strike because of their anger at owners.

"He added there 'was considerable sentiment to move the strike to an earlier date — on some teams as early as tomorrow."

"Just because the owners are behaving in an irresponsible and provocative manner doesn't mean the players have to do so," Fehr said.

The pension payment was due Aug. 1 and represented one-seventh of the owners' $57 million annual contribution under the deal that expired March 19. Management negotiator Richard Ravitch said teams didn't make the payment because the agreement had expired.

"I understand the players may be sorry we didn't make a payment we weren't obligated to make," he said.

Fehr, after a conference call with the union's executive board, said players didn't understand the owners' actions.

"Why in the world are the owners trying to do this?" he asked. "What are the owners trying to accomplish? I don't have an answer to that unless it is to force a strike as soon as possible."

Fehr said he wasn't sure the owners were interested in trying to avert a work stoppage that would be the sport's eighth in 22 years.

"In fact," he said, "we see quite the opposite."

He called the owners' pension move "highly irresponsible."

Russia's Alexei Urmanov performs his routine on the side horse during the Goodwill Games men's individual apparatus competition Thursday in St. Petersburg, Russia. He tied for the gold in the event with Ukrainian Grigori Misyutin.

CBS steals 2 of 3 top bowl games from NBC

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — CBS Sports, which in the past year has lost both major league baseball and the NFL, came out the big TV winner in the college football sweeps, landing two of the three top bowl games in the new alliance.

"For now, this is the last major frontier for college sports championships," CBS Sports president David Kenin said. "We've kind of cornered the market on it, and we've very happy."

In June, NBC Sports president Dick Ebersol acknowledged his network had lost the Orange Bowl to CBS and said: "I'm sad that our relationship will come to an end after next January's game, but I'm delighted for the Orange Bowl that they have been able to find someone who is willing to spend more than double what we were."

CBS made the winning bids for the Orange and Fiesta bowls, taking them both from NBC after the next games. NBC has televised the Orange bowl since 1965 and the Fiesta Bowl since 1978.

On Thursday, it was announced that for the next six years, the Orange, Fiesta and Sugar bowls would rotate a national championship game, beginning with bowl games following the 1995 season.

CBS made the winning bids for the Orange and Fiesta bowls, taking them both from NBC after the next games. NBC has televised the Orange bowl since 1965 and the Fiesta Bowl since 1978.

"We're not here to be stupid about it, we hope," Kenin said. "We're going to be in there competitively, and we're delighted with this."

The Fiesta Bowl apparently was the high bidder at about $118 million for six years, at least some of that money coming from the sponsorship reportedly offered by IBM.

ABC, meanwhile, held onto the Sugar Bowl, which offered a reported $98 million for six years to be in the three-bowl rotation. Kenin said CBS also considered bidding for the Cotton Bowl, which NBC took from CBS two years ago, but settled on the Fiesta instead.

"We felt for us it would be either the Fiesta or the Cotton, and we felt that the Fiesta would be a better horse to ride, even though the Cotton Bowl had this wonderful and rich history," he said.

Bowl games will decide national champ

The Associated Press

GREENSBORO, N.C. — The Orange, Sugar and Fiesta bowls were selected today as hosts for the Bowl Alliance games to decide a national college football champion, beginning after the 1995 season.

Those bowls will alternate each year as the site of a matchup between the top two teams available. Champions from the Atlantic Coast, Big East, Big Twelve (formerly Big Eight) and Southeastern conferences will be involved, along with two at-large teams.

For next season only, the Southwest Conference winner will fill one of the two at-large berths.

The arrangement is for six years, with an escape clause after three years for the conferences.

After either the Orange (at Miami), the Sugar (New Orleans) or the Fiesta (at Tempe, Ariz.) selects the top two teams, the other two bowls will be filled by alternating selections.

"The bowl choices were made by a group of Division I-A conference commissioners after reviewing bids from bowls interested in participating. The biggest loser in the announcement was the Cotton Bowl, considered one of the Big Four bowls for decades."

The Orange, Sugar and Fiesta will be considered Tier 1 bowls, with one each on Dec. 31, Jan. 1 and Jan. 2.

The Orange Bowl reportedly bid $104 million, the Fiesta $118 million and the Sugar $98 million to get Tier 1 designations. The money comes from sponsorships and television contracts.

The Rose Bowl, the oldest of the New Year's Day classics, is not part of the alliance and will continue to match the Big Ten and Pacific-10 champions on New Year's Day.

If a team from the Big Ten or Pac-10 is ranked No. 1 or No. 2, a true championship game will not emerge from the alliance, which replaces the current bowl coalition.

The Cotton Bowl, traditionally played on New Year's Day, could disappear rather than accept a Tier 2 slot.

Dallas City Councilman Glenn Box said the Cotton Bowl was an "all or nothing deal." Several city and game officials also said last week they didn't think Dallas would support a Tier 2 game.

CBS will televise the 1996 Orange and Fiesta bowls, while the Sugar and the Rose will be on ABC. CBS took away the Orange Bowl from NBC by bidding more than double what NBC bid to keep the game.

In addition to the Cotton, the Gator Bowl bid for a Tier 1 slot.

Royals match major league winning streak

Kansas City slaps Oakland, 5-2, to claim 13th straight victory

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Kansas City Royals beat Oakland 5-2 Thursday and matched the major league's longest winning streak in two years with their 13th straight victory.

Felix Jose had three hits and Kevin Appier (7-6), with only one decision in his eight previous starts, pitched a four-hitter. The Athletics lost their sixth straight.

American League

The Royals' streak started July 23 in Detroit and includes a club-record 10 straight wins on a homestand. It's the longest in the major leagues since Atlanta won 13 straight in 1992.

Carlos Reyes (0-3) took the loss.

Blue Jays 5, Red Sox 2

BOSTON — Joe Carter reached 100 RBIs for the sixth straight season and John Olerud knocked in two runs with a groundout as Toronto defeated Boston.

Carter, who has had eight seasons of 100 or more RBIs, hit a sacrifice fly in the fourth inning to reach the milestone.

Todd Stottlemyre (6-7) allowed two runs on seven hits in seven innings as the Jays won 5-2, winning the side in the sixth, and walked five.

Roger Clemens (9-7) lost his fifth straight decision against the Blue Jays.

Indians 5, Tigers 0

CLEVELAND — Rookie Albie Lopez struck out 11 in his first career shutout Thursday night, leading the Cleveland Indians past the Detroit Tigers 5-0 before the largest crowd ever at Jacobs Field.

Carlos Baerga had a two-run homer for the Indians in their last home game before the strike date.

The crowd of 41,926 gave the Indians their 28th straight sellout.

Lopez (1-7) allowed five hits and had a career-high strikeout total in his first complete game in the majors. The 22-year-old right-hander was recalled from Class AAA Charlotte on July 25 after a win by Clark, the Indians' winning pitcher, had his right wrist in a pine drive.

Lopez was 3-1 with the Indians last year and went 12-2 with Charlotte this season.

Rangers 4, White Sox 1

ARLINGTON, TEXAS — Brian Bohannon turned in his best start of the season and the Texas Rangers stretched their lead to 4-1 against the Chicago White Sox on Thursday night.

Rusty Greer hit a two-run homer and Jeff Frey and Juan Gonzalez had RBI singles to help the Rangers move within four games of 500 and boost their lead over the Oakland A's, who lost at Kansas City earlier Thursday.

Bohannon pitched 3-1 for 4.3 innings, allowing one run and one hit, but he was pulled in the fifth inning for a half-game win.

Bohannon (2-1), battered by the California Angels in his previous start, allowed seven hits and struck out five in the go-ahead run in his longest outing of the season. Tom Henke pitched the ninth for his 15th save.

Brewers 5, Orioles 3

MILWAUKEE — Jose Valentin hit a two-run homer and John Jaha had a pair of RBI doubles Thursday night as the Milwaukee Brewers snapped a three-game losing streak with a 5-3 victory over the Baltimore Orioles.

Jaha drove in the go-ahead run in the sixth, breaking a 3-3 tie with his second double. He drove in Greg Vaughn, who also doubled.

Cal Eldred (11-10) won his second straight game, allowing seven hits in 6 1/3 innings. He walked four and struck out five. Mike Fetters pitched the ninth for his 17th save.

Baltimore's Mark Williamson (3-1), making his 365th major league appearance but only his 15th start, lasted 6 2/3 innings, leaving after he walked Kevin Seitzer in the seventh. He gave up nine hits and four runs.

Jeff Cirillo added an RBI double in the eighth for Milwaukee's final run.

Cal Ripken, playing in his 2003rd consecutive game, had tied the score 3-3 in the fifth with a 400-foot solo homer to left, his 13th of the season.

Yankees 9, Twins 2

MINNEAPOLIS — Bernie Williams had three of New York's season-high eight doubles and Jim Abbott got only his third victory since May 30 as the Yankees won their seventh straight game, 9-2 over Minnesota on Thursday night.

The only runs off Abbott (9-7) in his 5 2/3 innings came on a two-run second-inning homer by Kent Hrbek, who earlier in the day announced he will retire, after the season.

The Yankees tied their season-high with 19 hits, including three apiece by Williams, Wade Boggs, Luis Polonia and Paul O'Neill, in winning their ninth straight road game — their longest streak since 1975.

New York, with the best record in the majors at 68-38, has gone 18-3 since the All-Star break and leads Baltimore by 10 games in the AL East.

Mariners 4, Angels 2

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Eric Anthony's two-run, pinch-homer in the eighth inning led Seattle to a 4-2 victory over California on Thursday night as the Mariners completed only their second series sweep ever against the Angels.

Gossage Gossage (3-0) earned the victory in his 1,000th career appearance. Only Hoyt Wilhelm (1,070) and Kent Tekulve (1,050) have pitched in more major league games.

Anthony homered on the first pitch he saw from Mark Leiter (4-5), who relieved Brian Anderson to start the eighth with California leading 2-1. It was Anthony's ninth homer of the season and Seattle's fifth pinch-homer, a new club record.

Leiter had walked pinch-hitter Reggie Jefferson before facing Anthony. He also allowed Mike Blowers' infield single with the bases loaded later in the inning.

Gross, Worrell, Piazza lift Dodgers past Padres

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Kevin Gross, Carlos Worrell and Mike Piazza homered as the Los Angeles Dodgers beat the San Diego Padres 1-0 Thursday and moved 2 1/2 games in front of idle San Francisco in the NL West.

Gross (9-7) gave up all six hits in eight innings, struck out four and walked none. He hasn't had a shutout since he pitched a no-hitter against the Giants on Aug. 17, 1992. Worrell pitched a 1-2-3 ninth for his ninth save.

Piazza hit his 24th home run in the fourth. It was his first career home run against Andy Benes (6-13) and marked the 14th time he'd homered to either tie the game or put the Dodgers in front.

Gross gave up a one-out single in the first inning and retired his next 14 batters. He escaped a bases-loaded threat in the seventh by retiring Billy Bean on a pop and pinch-hitter Tony Gwynn on a fly to center.

Gwynn, leading the majors with a .390 average and looking for his fifth NL batting title, did not start because of a sore left knee.

Marlins 5, Cubs 1

CHICAGO — Mark Gardner allowed five hits in 7 2/3 innings and Gary Sheffield had three RBIs as Florida beat Chicago for its third straight win.

The teams weren't sure they would play until less than an hour before the game started as the Players Association considered moving up their Aug. 12 strike date in response to the owners' refusal to make a pension plan payment.

Gardner (4-4) held the Cubs hitless for 4 1/3 innings in beating Steve Trachsel (9-7), who was activated from the disabled list before the game.

Sheffield hit his 24th home run and had a two-run double, Benito Santiago hit his 11th homer and Jerry Browne had a RBI single for the Marlins.

Pirates 5, Phillies 1

PHILADELPHIA — Jon Lieber limited Philadelphia to three hits in 7 1/3 innings and Dave Card drove in two runs as Pittsburgh handed Card Schilling, last year's NL playoffs MVP, his eighth loss in nine decisions.

National League

Lieber (6-8) struck out six and walked one. Schilling, 16-7 last season, allowed all five runs on 11 hits in 6 1/3 innings.

Andy Van Slyke's RBI single gave the Pirates a 1-0 lead in the first, and Carlos Garcia and Clark had RBIs in the fifth to make it 3-1.

Jeff King hit his fourth home run in the sixth for Pittsburgh.

Cardinals 7, Expos 3

MONTREAL — Bob Tewksbury allowed on five hits and Todd Zeile hit a grand slam as St. Louis ended Montreal's six-game winning streak.

The loss, only the second for the NL East-leading Expos in their last 16 games, ended the Cardinals' losing streak at four.

Tewksbury (12-10), 1-3 with a 9.43 ERA in his previous four starts, retired 10 straight to start his fourth complete game. Kirk Ruetter (6-2) gave up two runs in six innings, the second in 10 outings he's lasted past the fifth.

The Cardinals led 3-1 entering the ninth, but Mel Rojas issued two walks around a single by Tewksbury and Zeile cleared the bases with his 17th home run.

Astros 6, Rockies 2

HOUSTON — Scott Servais and Craig Biggio drove in two runs apiece and Houston defeated the Colorado Rockies 6-2 Thursday night. The Astros' third straight victory against their most troublesome foe.

Kile (8-6) allowed eight hits and two runs in 6 2/3 innings as the Astros to only their seventh victory in 24 games against the Rockies. He struck out five, did not walk a batter and retired 13 straight in one stretch.

The Astros' 3-1 victory in the four-game series was the first in their history against the Rockies.

Servais hit the first of his two RBI groundouts in the second and Biggio capped the three-run inning with a two-run triple to make it 3-0.

Kevin Ritz (4-6) left after 2 2/3 innings with tightness in his right triceps. He gave up five runs on four hits and four walks. He struck out one.

On Tuesday, there will be two games with the losers playing at 4 p.m. and the championship game is slated for 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday. If the champion loses in that game, another contest will be played Wednesday at 12:30 p.m.

The tournament dominated by the Gems last year and by a Boise club three out of the last four seasons. Potocello and Bingham had 9-1 records (including double) against Twin Falls, the Rebels sweeping the Cowboys and the Bulls losing one game out of four.

Twin Falls had success against only one team playing in the 1994 tournament. The Boise Gems, dropped a 4-0 decision to Twin Falls in the Cowboy Classic. Jamie Hyde shut down the Gems.

Hyde will get the nod in the opening game against the Senators on Saturday. Mark Scofield will toss the second contest.

Perhaps one of the most feared players on the Cowboy team is outfielder Greg Scheelhaus who hit his ninth homer in the district tournament. Infielder Willie Bird has posted success at the plate with seven hits in the last two games.

Meridian had some early season success in a tournament against some quality teams in Lewiston.

Post Falls, Couer d'Alene and the Senators are unknowns heading into the tournament.

The trick: He put a mixture of liquid nitrogen and oxygen and had it sprayed on the rink through a fire hose, creating a cushion of cold air which allowed the ice to freeze faster.

"It was a matter of getting the stronger cooling agent into the system," said Goodwill Games president Jack Kelly. "That had never been used on an ice rink...but it worked."

Just in time, too.

The decision to skate Thursday morning, about nine hours before the start of competition. The skating had already been put off one day because the ice wasn't ready at Yubilleyn, and organizers had made contingency plans to skate to the nearby SKA ice hockey hall.

The ice was slightly discolored because there wasn't enough time to paint it, but the skaters had no major complaints.

The ice here was excellent tonight, but the day of cold air which it was a little hairy. It wasn't quite as good. They must have done a lot of work on it.

The 7,000-seat rink was more than 60 percent full, making it one of the best attended events at the Games so far. The crowd was enthusiastic and the performances good.

Umanov, skating to music from Verdi and wearing a blue sequined outfit with white gloves, dazzled the crowd with a program that included a triple axel combination. His artistic presentation earned him a score of 15.5, while he took 5.8 and 5.9 for the eight required elements.

Except for Eldridge, American skaters had a rough time.

Michael Weiss and Aren Nielsen lagged in sixth and seventh in the men's program, Calla Urbanski and Twins Hrbeck announces retirement

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Kent Hrbek grew up near old Red Stadium and, he says, bleeds Minnesota Twins red, white and blue.

No longer able to wear his uniform proudly, the big first baseman announced Thursday that he will retire at the end of the season.

"I feel I can still hit. The problem is getting there after I hit it," said Hrbek, who has battled several injuries the last five years.

"Hitting the ball off the wall and not being able to make it to second base, I don't like that. And I can't play first base like I used to. It's not that I really wanted to (retire), but I think I had to. I wasn't doing the job."

"I love the game. I love the people. It's just time for Kent to sit down and take on some other lives in the game of life — fishing, hunting, family stuff."

Hrbek, 34, has spent his entire career in the Twins organization. He is the only member of the current team to have worn a Minnesota uniform at the old Met, and he and Kirby Puckett are the only ones left from the 1987 World Series championship team.

"My house is painted red, white and blue. I'm going to bleed Twins forever," he said. "I'm a Twins fan. I've always been a Twins fan and I will continue being a Twins fan forever."

Hrbek, who ranks in the Twins' top five in almost every offensive category, is the second former All-Star to retire this year.

Chicago's Ryne Sandberg, perhaps the era's best second baseman, didn't wait until the end of the season to retire. He left the Cubs in May, walking away from about $15 million because he said the game was no longer fun.

Hrbek is not a probable Hall of Famer like Sandberg but has been one of baseball's best first basemen during a 13-year career. He's in the final season of a five-year, $14 million contract and says he's still having fun. But he simply doesn't feel he has played well the last couple of years.

Hrbek originally had planned to announce his retirement in September. But with a strike threatening to end the season next week, Hrbek moved up his announcement.

"I was wondering if we were even going to show up here today, the way they were talking," he said.

The union, angry about management's decision not to make the Aug. 1 payment to the players' pension plan, considered walking immediately but instead decided to keep the Aug. 12 strike date.

Hrbek would be happy if the strike never happens because playing baseball for the Twins is the one thing he loves most.

"We have a lot of fun. It's a great atmosphere in the Twins clubhouse," he said. "It's kind of like sitting by a campfire, talking about that 'big fish' that got away. All the talking and stuff is probably the part of the game I'll miss the most."

"There ain't nothing wrong with hitting a home run and jogging around the bases, either. I enjoy that, also."

Hrbek has 291 home runs, second in club history to Harmon Killebrew's 475. This season, Hrbek's worst, he has only eight.

"There ain't a good friend of mine, Gary Gaetti," Hrbek said, referring to his one-time teammate and best friend who now plays for Kansas City.

"He saw me round first base the other day when I hit a double in Kansas City. He said, 'I look like you should retire,' the way I was running the bases."

Hrbek went from Class A ball to the Twins on Aug. 24, 1981, and started that day at New York. He beat the Yankees with a 12th-inning home run and has anchored the Twins' infield ever since.

Twins Kent Hrbek, rear, is congratulated by teammates after hitting a grand slam home run against the St. Louis Cardinals in Game 6 of the 1987 World Series in Minneapolis. Hrbek announced Thursday he will retire at the end of the season.

He has a career batting average of .282, with 1,076 RBIs, 1,741 hits, 900 runs and 2,961 total bases. He holds the major league record with 164 home runs in dinged ballparks.

"I'm not really a big man on records," Hrbek said. He then held up his right hand, where he wore his 1991 World Series championship ring. "I've got one of these on my finger and I've got one sitting at home. I guess that was the goal."

Manager Tom Kelly with miss Hrbek's hitting, fielding and have-fun attitude.

Mostly, he'll miss the way Hrbek's big left-handed bat disrupts an opponent's strategy.

"I know the opposing manager doesn't want to face him," Kelly said. "He causes confusion to the other manager and to the bullpen."

Bucs look to Dilfer for leadership, QB 8-year, $16.5 million contract is biggest in team's history

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — A tired but confident Trent Dilfer signed the richest contract in Tampa Bay Buccaneers history on Thursday and promised to do whatever is necessary to help the team break a cycle of losing.

The Bucs, who haven't won more than six games in a season since 1981, are counting on Dilfer to develop into the leader and franchise quarterback Vinny Testaverde never became in Tampa Bay. Dilfer led the nation in passing efficiency last season at Fresno State.

Testaverde was the first pick in the 1987 draft but didn't play up to expectations. Coach Sam Wyche abandoned the effort to build around him in 1993 and selected Dilfer No. 6 overall this year.

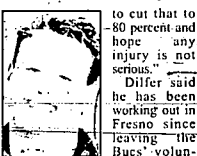

"I have a lot of high expectations for myself and, most of all, for the teams I'm a part of. I really believe we have a real good shot to be much better and turn this thing around," Dilfer said after signing an eight-year, $16.5 million contract that could be worth much more if he meets certain performance incentives.

The contract includes a club-record $4.5 million signing bonus and has provisions for voiding coming years after the fourth and sixth seasons. The Bucs also have the option of buying back years five through eight.

Dilfer arrived in Tampa on a red-eye flight from California early Thursday and slept a couple hours before getting started on his pro career. He joined the team for meetings in the afternoon and practiced for the first time Thursday night.

Wyche and quarterback coach Turk Schonert will spend extra time with the 6-foot-4, 230-pound quarterback to try to get him ready to play some in Tampa Bay's second exhibition game, at Seattle on Aug. 13.

"History says 90 percent of the guys coming in late are going to get hurt," Wyche said. "We'll try Dilfer months ago and has lost 18 pounds and reduced his body fat by 9 percent.

With the first-round pick absent from camp for 11 days, third-year pro Craig Erickson clearly established himself as the starting quarterback. But Dilfer knows he's viewed as the future of the franchise.

"I have no doubt I can do what they're asking me to do. I never have had a doubt," the rookie said.

"I'm nervous that I'm 12 days late and have 12 days of catching up to do. There's probably a lot of late-night studying and a lot of early mornings and getting up and doing extra work. I'm anxious about that, but at the same time you've got to be a little nervous, competing now, and I've given them the person a huge head start. I've got to make it up."

The signing leaves second-round pick Ernie Rethel at Tampa Bay's only unsigned rookie. The Florida running back has been seeking first-year pay of about $600,000 but the club has only $380,000 remaining in the rookie salary pool. Dilfer said he's pulling for Rethel to get into camp as soon as possible.

"We need Ernie a whole lot. I truly believe at this point right now, Ernie is probably a little bit more valuable to this organization than I am," the quarterback said. "He's going to step in and probably play from day one. He's a fantastic player and you've got to be able to run the football to win games in the NFL."

Baseball carnival expected to draw thousands

BOSTON (AP) — Old-time players and top-league officials welcomed ardent fans to the opening Thursday of FanFest, a baseball-themed carnival on Fenway Park expected to draw thousands over the weekend.

But many fans said they felt like they were facing a whizzing baseball — the possibility of a player's strike next week.

"The only one that's going to lose is the fans," said Kevin Chiles, 31, of Revue.

Major League Baseball is putting the carnival on for the Red Sox. It's the first time it's been set up in a city other than the city hosting the All-Star game. The carnival marks the 125th anniversary of professional baseball.

FanFest offers everything from a demonstration of how a baseball bat is made to typical midway games with a baseball theme. In one game, contestants try to toss ping pong balls into upside-down batting helmets floating in a pool of water.

The strains of "Take Me Out To the Ballgame" regularly waft through the air and past attractions such as "the world's largest baseball" and exhibits on baseball's history.

On Thursday afternoon, former players Dick Radatz and Rico Petrocelli signed balls. Later, Red Sox ace Roger Clemens, whose mother is battling emphysema, gave anti-tobacco talk to about 150 kids.

The opening ceremonies were attended by both new American League president Gene Budig and his new National League counterpart, Leonard Coleman Jr. Everyone said the right thing.

"No city anywhere has done more than the Boston Red Sox to enhance the image of professional baseball over the last 125 years. The tradition is here. It is alive, it is well," Budig said.

Such former Red Sox players as Butch Hobson, who now manages the team, also was on hand.

The festival runs through the weekend and spills over to events Saturday night at Fenway Park and Sunday night at the Harborlights concert pavilion when baseball legends will make personal appearances.

John Harrington, chief executive of the Red Sox, said he was frustrated with the lack of progress in negotiations between players and owners.

"It has to be settled because baseball is bigger than labor or management," he said.

Some frustrated fans didn't look any further for the cause of the problems than the carnival's concession stands, where Red Sox jerseys were selling for $60 and FanFest T-shirts were going for $18.

"Baseball's becoming too commercialized," said Chiles. "... They should come to an agreement."

Mike Matacunas of South Boston agreed.

"It's all money. It's all big business. I think it's lousy because it's the American sport. It's the American dream of a sport," he said.

Bledsoe copes with expectations of Patriots

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP) — At this time last year, Drew Bledsoe was still trying to remember the names of the Patriots' coaches and nervously awaiting his first NFL action.

Now, as New England prepares to host the New Orleans Saints in an exhibition game Friday night, a more seasoned Bledsoe is trying to deal with the growing expectations surrounding the No. 1 pick in the 1993 draft.

"I just feel a lot more comfortable. I was pretty nervous at this time last year. I was trying to learn the names of the coaches and learn the system. It's hard to compare last year to this year, it's just a huge difference."

Bledsoe is expected to play about a half against New Orleans, with Scott Zolak scheduled to play much of the second half. New England coach Bill Parcells said rookie quarterback Jay Walker, who is recovering from the flu, may also play in the second half.

The Saints will have a couple of new faces at quarterback. Jim Everett, traded from the Los Angeles Rams to New Orleans this spring, will play the first quarter and be relieved by Wade Wilson, who started for the Saints last season.

Wilson will run the offense for the second quarter, and rookie Doug Nussmeier, a left-hander who threw 91 touchdown passes at Idaho, will work the second half.

"I like our quarterback situation," Saints coach Jim Mora said. "I like (Everett's) approach mentally. I like his attitude, his leadership capabilities as a quarterback."

Mora said he may not play linebacker Winfred Tubbs or running back Derek Brown, both of whom are recovering from hamstring pulls. Linebacker Sam Mills and defensive lineman Frank Warren will not play, Mora said, because the veterans don't need the work.

Both coaches were focusing on their own players, rather than worrying too much about the opposition, in advance of the game.

"It'll just be a pretty fundamental game. I don't think it will be too fancy," Parcells said. "You treat this more in a reactionary way rather than preparation. You just go and play and you realize it's going to be a little sloppy."

Parcells and his players are trying to deal with the huge expectations of long-suffering New England fans, who base their optimism on the team's four straight wins at the end of last year.

"Not since I've been here have I seen this level of enthusiasm around this team, not just from the players but from the fans around New England," said linebacker Vincent Brown, who has led the Patriots in tackles for the past three seasons.

For the players and coaches, Friday's game will be a relief after the grind of two-day workouts since mid-July.

"The novelty aspect of this (first preseason game) has worn off," said Parcells, starting his second season with the Patriots and his 10th as an NFL head coach. "But you walk out on the football field Friday night and you know it's football season."

For the Saints, there was a slightly odd sendoff at the training facility in the Cross, Wis.

The sign that greeted New Orleans players in the dining room at lunch Thursday said: "Good Luck Against The Vikings."

Ryan thinks poorly of Cardinal defense

The Associated Press

In his first game as coach of the Arizona Cardinals, Buddy Ryan is thinking backwards — offense before defense.

Ryan, whose Cardinals play San Francisco tonight, thinks the 49ers have the best offense in the NFL. But not the best defense.

"Their defense isn't as good," Ryan said. "In Saturday's game, we'll work out to score a lot of points and hopefully win the ballgame."

Not everyone is as anxious to win exhibitions as Ryan.

As the first full week of the exhibition season opens today, many coaches will give veterans minimal time to prevent injury and to get a look at rookies.

In today's other games, the New York Jets are at Detroit; Seattle at Indianapolis; Philadelphia at Chicago and New Orleans at New England.

In Saturday's games, the Los Angeles Rams play Green Bay at Madison, Wis.; Pittsburgh is at Miami; Cincinnati at Tampa Bay; Cleveland at the New York Giants; Houston vs. San Diego at San Antonio; Atlanta at Denver and Kansas City vs. Minnesota.

In Sunday's games, the Los Angeles Raiders are at Dallas on Sunday night and Washington at Buffalo Monday night.

For Ryan and the Cardinals, who expect to contend for the playoffs for the first time since the Los Angeles Rams of St. Louis, San Francisco is a good opponent. Ryan gets a look at his 46th defense, which is something new for almost all the Cardinals. The only exceptions are the ones who played for him in Philadelphia, like defensive end Clyde Simmons, linebacker Seth Joyner and defensive backs Terry Hoage and Andre Waters.

"We'd play the same way if we were playing anybody," Ryan said. "It doesn't make any difference. The 49ers just have a lot of good people on offense, and it'll be a real challenge to see if our defense is still kind of learning."

For the Niners, it's more like rookie time.

If the Cards keep blitzing, they're unlikely to expose Steve Young, now their only experienced quarterback. Nor will back Marc Logan start rookie William Floyd, a second-round draft choice, will be in his place.

"All of the other fullbacks are getting banged up. That seems to be the singled-out position this year," says coach George Seifert.

Drew Bledsoe will probably approach Floyd's position as the Patriots meet the Saints.

A year ago, Bledsoe was just trying to learn the names of his teammates and his coaches as he began his NFL career after being taken by the Pats as the No. 1 pick in the draft.

Now he's knows what to expect as he prepares to play a half or so against the Saints.

"I just feel a lot more comfortable. I was pretty nervous at this time last year," Bledsoe says. "I was trying to learn the names of the coaches and learn the system. It's hard to compare last year to this year, it's just a huge difference."

Dumars, Miller help Dream Team II win

HAMILTON, Ontario (AP) — The question before the 1994 World Championship of Basketball started was whether Dream Team II could beat the original Dream Team that won the 1992 Olympics.

When the U.S. team trailed late in the first half Thursday night, the question was whether it could beat Spain, fifth in the European championships and a 41-point loser to Dream Team I in the Olympics.

Dream Team II went on to win its first-round, Pool A game 115-100 behind the outside shooting of Joe Dumars and Reggie Miller. But the ease with which Spain scored on the Americans leaves some doubt about how the heavy gold medal favorites will fare the rest of the 11-day tournament.

Dumars scored 21 points and Miller had 20 for the Americans, who pulled away in the second half as Spanish coach Manuel Sainza benched several of the players who did so well in the first 20 minutes.

Dumars, the only U.S. team member with an NBA championship ring, scored 12 points in the first 10:07. When his 3-pointer with 9:53 left in the first half gave the United States a 34-22 advantage, the Americans looked unstoppable.

But for the next four minutes, the Spaniards dominated, outscoring the U.S. team 20-7 for a 42-41 edge with 5:26 left. Backward forward Alberto Herreros scored eight of his 11 first-half points in the run, including a shocking 3-pointer that put Spain ahead.

The slim advantage lasted just six seconds, however, as Kevin Johnson converted a three-point play that put the United States ahead to stay.

Johnson's free throw, with 3:7 seconds left made it 59-51 at halftime.

The original Dream Team, led by Michael Jordan, Magic Johnson and Charles Barkley, had one brief first-half scare at the Olympics, trailing Croatia 25-23 with 9:44 left in the gold medal game.

The Americans went on to win that game by 32.

Spain trailed just 62-55 early in the second half before the Americans pulled away with a 16-0 run capped by two 3-pointers from Miller and one by Dumars, who had three 3s in the second half.

The burst gave Dream Team II a 78-55 lead with 14:30 left, and it went on to lead 99-74 before Spain closed to 110-98 with 2:37 left behind Jordi Villacampa, who scored 23 of his 28 points in the second half.

Juan Antonio Orenga 14 points for Spain. Herreros did not play in the second half, nor did Ferran Martinez, who had 10 first-half points.

In Thursday's other Pool A game, Brazil played China at night.

In Pool B, Croatia beat Cuba 85-65 as Dino Radja of the Boston Celtics had 25 points and eight rebounds. Croatia's NBA frontline of Radja, Toni Kukoc of the Chicago Bulls and Stojan Vujanovic, formerly of the Celtics, finished with 45-20 rebound advantage. Croatia shot 61 percent from the field (36-for-59) as a dominant throughout.

Australia hung on to beat South Korea 87-85, scoring only one point over the final six minutes as South Korea closed an 86-71 deficit to 86-85 with 55 seconds to play. Andrew Gaze, who finished with 31 points, made one free throw with 1:3 seconds left and South Korea missed a final 3-pointer. Kyung-Eun Moon led South Korea with 24 points, all on 3-pointers.

In Pool C, Russia beat Argentina 84-64 as Yevgeni Kissourin had 19 points, 12 on 3-pointers, as Russia finished with a 45-23 advantage on the boards and outscored Argentina 33-19 from the free throw line. Marcelo Nicola led Argentina with 19 points and eight rebounds. Canada played Angola in a late game.

In Pool D, Jose Ortiz had 19 points to lead six scorers in double figures as Puerto Rico cruised past Egypt 102-74.

Panagiotis Fassoulas had 18 points and 10 rebounds to lead Greece to a 68-58 victory over Germany. A 3-point play by Giorgos Sigalas with 12:23 to play gave Greece the lead for good at 42-39 and started a 10-0 run. Henning Hamisch led Germany with 16 points.

Ex-Cowboy player says friend kicked door open in celebration

CANTON, Ohio (AP) — Randy White, a member of the Pro Football Hall of Fame since Saturday, said Thursday he hopes some Ohio people understand that he, his brother and friends were merely in a mood to celebrate when a door to a residential suite was kicked open.

A Canton-area man and his wife say the former Dallas Cowboys defensive tackle kicked in their door.

Jason Martin, of suburban Jackson Township, alleged that White was drunk Saturday night and kicked at the door, apparently thinking that Martin's residence was the one that he was staying.

White came to Ohio for his induction into the pro football shrine.

Martin said the incident occurred Saturday evening. He said the door flew open.

Martin's wife, Susan, filed a statement with the Jackson Township police saying White was being helped across the parking lot "as he was too intoxicated to walk on his own." The wife was confused as to which room they were looking for. When they finally found it, Randy said, "Why don't you try this one" and kicked the door open.

White, contacted by telephone today in Dallas, said there was some damage to a door.

"Some of my friends were celebrating and someone kicked the door and the door jam came open," White said. "But it wasn't me. I don't hardly even remember the door getting kicked."

White admitted to drinking with friends, but not to being intoxicated.

Fans cry foul over park smell

Dallas Morning News

ARLINGTON, Texas — Something smells at The Ballpark in Arlington, something stronger and less fragrant than the usual summertime aromas of beer, sweat and popcorn.

Fans sitting along the front rows of the ballpark have to pay a price for their enviable view of Texas Rangers games: They also have to suffer a smell described as that of a toilet, a swamp, a distasteful body odor and, most commonly, a sewer.

"It kind of makes you want to check yourself every now and then," joked Fort Worth resident Fodd Mahab.

Rangers' officials believe the smell is caused by the remnants of each game's concessions, which are washed into the storm drains and build up there. The summertime heat causes the residue to rot and reek, and the resulting gases rise through the storm drains and finally drift into the seating sections, they said.

"Anytime you have 49,000 people in one place and one time, eating and drinking, you can expect odors to be caused by the people being there," said Matt Stolley, director of operations at the ballpark. "But we're taking what steps we can until we find a solution."

The ballpark, which opened in April and was built at a cost of about $189 million — probably isn't the only stadium to have problems with lingering odors, he said, but "the Texas heat makes ours quite unique."

Stolley stressed that the problem is in the storm — not sewage — drains. While fans may be "unfortunately very uncomfortable from the odors," he said, "they're in no danger."

To address the problem, custodians now hose down the offending floor drains and spray them with deodorizer before each game. Maintenance workers — and some industrious fans — also have begun covering the drains before each game, attempting to plug the source of the smell.

The most likely long-term plan calls for installing a fan system in the storm drains to blow the gases out of the stadium. The cost for such a system would run in the thousands of dollars, Stolley said.

About 10 people complain about the smell each game, he said.

"A lot in terms of our crowd? No. More than we would like? Yes," he said.

The most affected areas happen to be the best seats in the park, since the floor drains emitting the odors are at the front of each section and the smell is most noticeable at ground level. The odor also occasionally extends to the field, where baseball players and photographers suffer along with the fans.

Tuesday night, as the Texas Rangers played the Chicago White Sox, the smell wasn't as bad as other days, some fans said. The weather was cool and dry, the wind wasn't too strong, and the stadium had had an extra day to recover from the previous game's debris. But every now and then, the wind would turn or pick up, and the unpleasant smells of summer would make their unmistakable return.

"It comes and it goes, but it's pretty bad. There've been three or four people who sat right behind us and went, 'Oooh, what's that smell?'" and left," said Christine Hollingsworth of Norman, Okla., as she and her family sat in a corner of the Home Run Porch in right field.

"We're going to tough this out," she said. "This is where our tickets are."

The worst-smelling section, according to one usher, is slightly to the left behind home plate. But Tommy Thomas of Wichita Falls, who holds season tickets in that area, was grateful about his situation.

"They've got it duct-taped tonight. That helps," he said, pointing at the covered drain under the seat in front of him.

Parish inks multi-year Hornets deal

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Robert Parish, arriving with three NBA championship rings and a pending invitation to the Hall of Fame, insists he doesn't mind taking a backup role with the Charlotte Hornets.

"My ego has been in check for a long time," the nine-time All-Star center of the Boston Celtics said Thursday after signing a multi-year contract with the Hornets.

"I've played with Larry (Bird), Kevin (McHale) and some other great players," Parish said at a news conference at the Charlotte Coliseum. "This isn't a bad thing. It's about finishing my career out in the best fashion."

Coming off the bench behind a fine young center like Alvin Robertson, Parish said, he said the 7-foot Parish, the NBA's oldest player, who will turn 41 on Aug. 30.

While terms weren't disclosed, published reports said Parish agreed to a two-year deal with an optional third year, and a guarantee of about $5.5 million. That amount would increase to about $7.5 million if Parish plays for three seasons.

Parish will make about $1.9 million the first season and $2.5 million the second season under terms of the verbal agreement, sources told three area newspapers.

Thursday's signing sets a flurry of activity involving both NBA clubs.

For the Hornets, the club hopes it will end some of the criticism received for failing to sign free agent forwards Horace Grant and Danny Ainge to stay in Charlotte.

For Boston, it killed a last-ditch effort to keep the 14-year crowd favorite in Boston.

The Boston Globe reported Thursday the Celtics had planned to use a loophole in the collective bargaining agreement, which would have allowed Parish to sign with a competing team, then be traded back to the Celtics.

Because of the salary cap, Boston was unable to re-sign Parish after it signed former Atlanta Hawks star Dominique Wilkins.

The Globe said under the league collective bargain agreement, Parish could not be "re-signed" for at least another year after he was let go, but there was no specific language prohibiting a trade for him once he was signed with another team.

While the Celtics declined comment, the Globe said sources confirmed that Boston found a team willing to go along with the proposed deal — signing Parish for $650,000, then trading him to the Celtics for a second-round draft pick.

Asked if he was close to signing with Boston, Parish said: "Very close."

"This is just a better situation for me," he said. "Obviously,

Center Robert Parish signed a multi-year contract with the Charlotte Hornets on Thursday.

I would have liked to have finished my career in Boston, where my career got a jump start.

"From a business standpoint this is a better situation for me," Parish said. "I won't have to play so many minutes carrying the load in the middle. It's going to be the Altonzo Mourning show."

Parish foresees himself playing about 10 to 15 minutes a game. He also expects to play sometimes alongside Mourning, the Hornets' 6-10 star center.

By signing Parish, the Hornets will not be able to re-sign Frank Brickowski. Parish would take Brickowski's slot in the salary cap.

Report shows hockey player used cocaine before accident

WEST BLOOMFIELD TOWNSHIP, Mich. (AP) — State police say Bob Probert, the former Detroit Red Wings enforcer now with Chicago, probably used cocaine and drank alcohol shortly before crashing his motorcycle.

A blood test showed Probert likely ingested the cocaine within two hours of being admitted to a hospital following July 15 crash in suburban Detroit, said state police Capt. Richard Lowthian.

Probert also had a blood-alcohol level of 0.31 percent, more than three times the legal limit, a police report said. The accident occurred in Oakland County's West Bloomfield Township.

Probert crashed his motorcycle into a car in Oakland County's West Bloomfield Township. He was hospitalized overnight.

Authorities charged him with drunk driving. He is free on $10,000 bond. NHL spokesman Gary Mager said the league will be looking into the matter.

The Red Wings released Probert, 29, shortly after the crash, saying management was fed up with his off-ice behavior. On July 23, he signed a four-year, $6-million deal with the Chicago Blackhawks.

But Probert's status in the NHL and the United States could be in jeopardy.

He had been playing for the Red Wings under a waiver from the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service. Officials say the waiver became void when Detroit released him, but he and the Blackhawks have the opportunity to appeal.

Charlotte owner plans Pirates buy

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — George Shinn plans to talk to officials with the Pittsburgh Pirates as soon as possible to discuss purchasing the National League club.

Shinn, who already owns the Charlotte Hornets of the NBA and the Class AAA Charlotte Knights, says he aggressively pursues the Pirates. The team's board of directors voted to put the team up for sale Wednesday, citing losses of $60 million since 1985.

Going after a major-league team isn't new to Shinn. Two years ago, he tried to purchase the San Francisco Giants when it appeared the team was about to be bought and moved to Florida. This time, if Shinn wins the anticipated bidding war, he'll bring the Pirates to the North Carolina-South Carolina area.

"Baseball is something that's near and dear to me," Shinn said. "I'll give it the best shot I can. I think it would be a tremendous boost to the economy of North and South Carolina."

The city of Pittsburgh, exercising its rights under a 1981 agreement to block any deal made by Mayor Tom Murphy's administration, has six months to find a new buyer that would keep the team in Pittsburgh.

The city will handle all negotiating, and the Pirates' owners cannot block any deal made by Mayor Tom Murphy's administration.

"It seems to me that people who are going to make offers are going to make them in the next couple of weeks," Murphy said.

Meanwhile, Barry Lucchino, who steered the Baltimore Orioles into Camden Yards and out of years of red ink, already is emerging as the frontrunner to buy the Pirates.

Shinn said he would not be interested in purchasing the Pirates if it meant he would have to promise to keep the club in Pittsburgh permanently.

"I've been blessed, but not that blessed," he said, citing the team's financial losses.

However, Shinn also said two other options interest him greatly: leaving the team to attempt to make it successful in Pittsburgh during a trial period, after which he'd have the option to move it; or having the freedom to move the team to the Knights' stadium in Fort Mill, S.C.

"Obviously, if I did buy the team, my goal would be to make it go there in Pittsburgh," Shinn said. "I would give it a good shot. I don't mean to be pompous or brassy, but with our team and our experience, if we couldn't do it, nobody could. If the city and the area didn't respond and support the team, we'd feel we'd be entitled to have the right to move."

Shinn said he doesn't consider the Charlotte area ready for a major-league baseball franchise. Yet, he said it could be in five years.

More Refugees take road home

Rwandans give up camps for uncertainty, leave behind channels for food, medicine

The Associated Press

RUEHNGERI, Rwanda — The old man rubbed his plastic crucifix and struggled up the banana grove path leading to the home he fled a month ago.

When he saw the two-room hut was neither damaged nor looted, he let go of the cross and clapped his hands together.

"It's still here, it's still here," he repeated Thursday as he touched his wife's hands, then the mud-brick walls. Sebohozzo Congor didn't know what to expect when he set out for home from a Zairian refugee camp last week with his wife and two relatives, including a handicapped grandson confined to a heavy wooden chair.

The defeated Rwanda army has spread rumors that the former Tutsi rebels would slaughter them. Many villages were leveled in the final battles for control of western Rwanda last month.

But Concord, 80, was certain what would happen if he remained in Zaire.

"I would die. I am old and getting weaker," he said. "I will not have the strength for this trip soon. I needed to be here."

More and more Rwandans are making similar treks. They would rather face their war-ravaged homeland than the diseases and squalor in the camps. But they also leave behind the channels for food and medical attention.

Rwanda has been stripped bare by civil war. Unharvested fields of corn and grain are rotting and food is scarce. The United Nations estimates 350,000 to 500,000 people were killed in the first eight weeks of the Rwanda crisis.

U.N. observers estimate nearly 130,000 Rwandans have crossed back into their country. They hope to encourage more by appealing to Rwandan civil leaders to lead their villages back. A radio station is expected to begin broadcasting information Friday designed to counter the army's mass-murder rumors, which have never been confirmed.

But aid groups say they are too overwhelmed by the more than 1 million refugees in Zaire to set up convoys over the border. Refugees must walk home, often for days.

The 90-mile road from the Zairian border to Ruhengeri, then Kigali, loosely follows the rebels' final offensive, which touched off the epic refugee exodus.

At Gisenyi, the border is marked by a dotted green line across the road.

Kohgemana Alitier's wheelbarrow tipped over as he tried to steer around it. Out spilled his possessions: blankets, cooking pots and some cartoon books that belonged to his daughter, who died of cholera in the camps.

He made sure the book was tightly tucked in the blanket folds before heading off toward home in Musanze.

Rwandan army: Defeated, defiant

The Washington Post

GOMA, Zaire — At a Red Cross hospital in an abandoned sports-center here, soldiers with gaping wounds lie on mats beneath the scorching midday sun. Intravenous bags hang from tree limbs.

Amputees move slowly among the supine bodies of the dead and dying.

These are Hutu soldiers who fought on the government side of Rwanda's civil war, whose ranks have been accused of killing hundreds of thousands of Tutsi civilians. Their army is in defeat — but not their mood. They themselves are in defiance.

They blame their military loss not on their own disarray, or on any superior attributes of the victorious guerrilla army of the Rwandan Patriotic Front, which has formed a government in Kigali, the Rwandan capital. Rather, the Hutu soldiers here blame the international community for their misfortune — especially the United States.

The U.N. Security Council imposed an arms embargo against Rwanda in May, a month after the outbreak of the tribal slaughter and of fighting between the mostly Tutsi rebels and Hutu soldiers. The embargo was directed at both sides in the civil war, but the ousted Hutu government blames the Clinton administration for the U.N. decision that the exiled Hutu soldiers here say cost them the war.

"We are not here because we were defeated, but because we had no ammunition," said Cpl. Mathias Sijakubwabo, 37, nursing a gunshot wound in his left hand. Asked if his comrades in exile were ready to fight again, he said, "All the soldiers are in place. All the leaders are in place. The only thing we are missing is ammunition."

"If the United Nations lifts the arms embargo, we can go back to Rwanda in force," said about 35 miles away.

The first few miles cut through the remains of the army's last stand and the badland of the refugee flight: burned out vehicles, trampled belongings, the stench of rotting bodies.

It was near here that Sabimana Jamhari said he spotted a small girl who collapsed by the roadside on Monday. Four days later, she was groggy with fever on the floor of his hut in Rubavu, about 12 miles up the road. Jamhari said he only knows the girl's name — Irambiya — and nothing else about her.

"I was coming back to my country with hopes all the killing would be over," he said. "It did not seem right to leave someone to die without trying to help."

Jamhari walks about a half hour each day to a roadside clinic set up by the French aid group Doctors Without Borders — one of three medical aid sites between the border and Ruhengeri. He thinks the girl is getting better.

On the road, the parade of returning refugees passes quietly. There are no cries of encouragement or even conversation. The refugees walk silently with belongings pitched on their heads or strapped to their backs. A few people carry stretchers holding relatives too weak to walk.

About 4,000 refugees passed by the medical point Thursday. Marie-Claire Unafirigira, nurse for 1-year-old daughter and watched the procession. She was afraid to leave the medical camp and walk the last leg to home.

"I'm so tired. I don't even want to think about walking or what will happen," she said. "When I get home, what will I eat?"

A few miles farther on, refugees broke into a run. Two truck-size moving vans were waiting to take them to Ruhengeri, a Zairian group, the International Organization for Migration, struck a deal with Rwanda's new leaders to transport the refugees.

A woman, hacking at ceiling beams in a bombed school house, looked up as the trucks passed. She waved her machete. A few people in the back of the truck waved back.

The issue of whether to supply vehicles to returning refugees has split aid groups. The U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees and other organizations say there is not enough trucks to devote to bringing back refugees.

Doctors Without Borders believes Rwanda is still too unstable to handle large amounts of returned refugees. But it also denies reports it opposes the use of vehicles as a way to weed out disease-carriers in a survival of the fittest during the grueling walk home.

At a ransacked gas station on the edge of Ruhengeri, a group of refugees waited for a truck. Hours past and some gave up. They pulled up their bundles and began the walk to Kigali.

Lt. Vincent Hareremana, 26, wounded in the face by shrapnel during the rebels' long and bloody siege of Kigali, "I think our army was ambushed until the U.N. imposed its arms embargo." — And there is no doubt that President Clinton has responsibility.

"If the Americans stay there, it will be difficult for us. Fight with the Americans? It's impossible!"

— Lt. Vincent Hareremana

"I personally don't support the presence of American troops in Rwanda, because the Americans are responsible for declaring the arms embargo in Rwanda," he said, speaking while lying on a mattress in one of the few tents in this makeshift hospital. But he said the presence of U.N. troops — and the U.N. mission — may inhibit the plans of ex-government forces to return one day, especially if the U.S. presence evolves into a peacekeeping role.

The Americans stay there, it will be difficult for us. Hareremana said. "Fight with the Americans? It's impossible!"

Reminded that Somalia's ragtag factional militias fought the United States to a standstill in Mogadishu, he replied: "The Somalis were inside their country. We are outside. It's a very different situation."

The bitterness and defiance — and anger at the United States — seem common sentiments among the defeated government soldiers who have fled here to Zaire. At the largest settlement for soldiers, on the road to Sake, west of Goma, a Rwandan military truck packed with soldiers displayed a hand-painted sign in English that said: "Clinton is a murderer. Every Rwandan refugee dead in exile is named Bill Clinton."

Untold thousands of Rwandan government soldiers are here in this remote region of east-

Eldery German watches over animals orphaned by Russians

The Associated Press

WUENSODORF, Germany — At empty army barracks where Soviet soldiers once awaited orders to invade the West, more than 150 hungry Red Army cats wait for their only friend left in the world.

The cats were abandoned by soldiers who have returned to Russia. The animals live in filthy deserted barracks and concrete bunkers scattered around the sprawling Wuensdorf compound, 16 miles south of Berlin.

Wilhelm Schrader, a frail man with wispy white hair, keeps the felines alive by driving from his home every day in a station wagon crammed with cans of "Happy Cat."

"No one wants them. I've always been partial to cats. Unlike many humans, they have a great deal of dignity," says the 65-year-old retired electrician.

Of about 380,000 Red Army troops stationed in East Germany during the Cold War, only 2,500 remain. They will be gone by the end of August under a 1990 treaty.

Much of the Wuensdorf base, where about 50,000 soldiers were once stationed, is now populated only by animals.

The cats come rumbling when they hear Schrader's Opel.

Schrader has lunch at a little table under a shady tree, one of his 45 daily stops throughout the base. Felines purr at his feet.

"Hey, guy. How are things?" Schrader asks his favorite, a gray male with a sleek body, tall ears and black stripes. A black cat stretches out in the dirt. A ginger one prances down a path to get its meal.

Schrader does what he can for a few dogs left behind by the troops, but it's difficult because some are becoming wild.

As he was making his rounds recently, Schrader saw an abandoned pet goat attacked by the dogs. Schrader chased off the dogs, took the goat to a petting zoo and is doing everything he can for a homeless cat. Money comes out of Schrader's pocket and from donations. He takes the cats to a veterinarian if they are sick. He put mattresses in the barracks for them to sleep on and tossed in little plastic balls for them to bat around.

At his home in Glindow, an hour from Wuensdorf, Schrader operates a shelter for animals abandoned by their German masters. But there's not enough room there for the Red Army cats.

Drug companies merge in health-care evolution

Newsday

Whether it's American Home Products' $8.5 billion cash offer for American Cyanamid or Merck's $6.6 billion acquisition of Medco Containment, consolidation in the U.S. health-care industry continues unabated, and for one basic reason: Only the strong survive.

The merger and acquisition wave, according to industry analysts, is being driven by managed health care and the fact that there is less money available to pay for a lot of expensive and sometimes redundant drugs, tests, and other services.

"What underpins this whole scenario," said Ray Egan of Bristol-Myers Squibb Co., "is the shift in this country from irrational markets and the fee-for-service system to a rational market system and managed health care. That is what's fueling this trend, and it's just the beginning."

Wall Street clearly agrees. Seven of the 15 most actively traded issues on the New York Stock Exchange Wednesday were drug companies, led by American Cyanamid Co., the target of Tuesday's huge takeover bid by American Home Products Corp. Shares of companies such as Warner-Lambert and Schering-Plough — both labeled "junk bait" in a recent analyst's report — rose sharply.

In a terse statement from its headquarters in Wayne, N.J., Cyanamid said it would consider American Home Products' offer "in due course." Its use of the word "unsolicited" in each paragraph of a two-page press release indicated a less-than-enthusiastic response.

Cyanamid's stock dropped 2 1/4 shares, but was still trading at 90¢, compared with Monday's close of 63¢.

Government drug-purchasing programs such as Medicaid, and the large managed care providers, such as Kaiser Permanente, HIP, PruCare, Actua and others, have gained great leverage over prices with their buying power, said Egan and other industry experts. For the same reasons, many independent retail drug stores are either going out of business, creating their own buying

A big brand name bid

American Home Products Corp. offered to buy competitor American Cyanamid Co. for about $8.5 billion in cash. The deal would be the biggest takeover in recent years in health care, an industry being whipped by government reform and cost-cutting. A look at the two companies.

American Home Products Corp.

Headquarters: Madison, N.J.
Businesses: Consumer health care products, pharmaceuticals, foods.

History: Founded in 1926, American Home Products grew through the Depression by acquiring more than 30 food and drug companies. It got into the prescription drug business in 1943 with the purchase of Ayerst Laboratories, based in Canada. It sold many of its non-health businesses in the 1980s. While the company itself has a low profile, its products are some of the best-known brand names, including Jif, Pamp, Chef Boyardee, Crunch 'n Munch, Advil, Anacin and Preparation H.

Recent news: The company in May announced a consolidation plan for manufacturing and distribution sites of Advil, Anacin, Dristan and Preparation H. It took a $174 million charge for the restructuring, including costs of eliminating 2,000 jobs by next year. In March, it was among several large drugmakers to be accused of unfair pricing in a lawsuit filed by four big grocery companies.

American Cyanamid Co.

Headquarters: Wayne, N.J.
Businesses: Pharmaceuticals, chemicals.

History: Started in 1907 by Frank Washburn, a civil engineer who bought rights to a process for making cyanamid, a basic component of fertilizer. Began an acquisition spree in 1916 with Anaguard Phosphate, producer of another ingredient of fertilizer. Diversified into chemicals and medical business in 1959 and consumer products in 1990.

Recent news: Last month, the company announced plans to sell its Davis & Geck wound management business to Braun Melsungen AG of Germany. The unit has $300 million in annual revenue and employs 3,000. In February, the company pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge for failing to keep accurate records while testing a new animal drug. networks or selling out to the big drug chains.

The managed care providers can extract heavy discounts on the prices of everything from the latest antibiotics and antacids to cotton swabs and dental floss. And if a company doesn't have a broad product line to offer with hefty discounts available, it may find itself squeezed out of a managed care provider's approved list of drugs and medical supplies.

As a result, companies are fighting to get their drugs, medical equipment and devices on these lists, called formularies. If they succeed, they gain market share and revenues. If they fail,

What's happening with health-care reform in Washington actually is lagging the forces already at work in the marketplace, analysts said. The need to rein in costs is changing not only the pharmaceutical industry but also the way doctors and hospitals charge patients and the way insurance companies reimburse for their services.

Fee-for-service — when the doctor or hospital charges a single fee for a single service for each visit — is on the way out; monthly and yearly billing for prepaid services including drugs, doctors and hospitals is on the way in.

Slow housing market, rising interest rates go hand-in-hand

Creative Real Estate

NEW YORK (AP) — When interest rates rise just about everything in the housing market slows. The number of new permits issued, housing starts, sales, employment and maybe even prices.

It is a very old and often sad story, and an almost totally predictable one. In every period of high or rising interest rates since World War II the housing markets have been among the first to show the impact.

It could be happening again. The Commerce Department reports that new-home sales fell in June to an annual rate of 591,000 units, the lowest in two years, from a May figure of 648,000. Housing starts were down too. So were sales of existing homes.

That said, interest rates aren't everything. Home prices are affected by dozens of specific factors; some within the control of those who live in them, those who seek to sell them and those who will want to buy.

You can't do much about the first of these — for example, a permanent body of water within 300 feet. Either it's there or it isn't. But you can change some factors — for example, adding a third bathroom — and probably raise the price 17.5 percent.

The National Association of Home Builders makes that estimate from its own and Census Bureau data, as applied to a 1,900 square-foot house with three bedrooms, two baths, three other rooms, a basement and a garage. Unlike the construction of a body of water, which would add 27.8 percent to the price of a house if it were possible to so change the landscape, an added bath is generally feasible and capable of raising the market value 17.5 percent.

Add a fireplace, says the NAHB, and you might expect to add 10.8 percent to the market value, or around $13,500 if you use as a base the median new-home price of about $125,000. (Caution: National medians seldom apply specifically.)

Other price-enhancing additions may be less likely to pay for themselves. A 500-square-foot expansion of floor space might add 9.4 percent to the price, a room addition either bath or bedroom might add 5.9 percent and a fourth bedroom could push up the selling price 3.2 percent.

In making any of these alterations, of course, the overall appearance has to improve. An amateur carpentry or plumbing job or an awkward extension may reveal not just itself but alert a casual eye to other flaws. What if house lacks has a similar impact on market value.

Home prices increase despite high mortgage rates

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Although mortgage rates were rising, Americans kept buying homes during the April-June quarter, driving prices up moderately in many areas of the nation, a real estate trade group said Wednesday.

The National Association of Realtors said sales of previously owned homes rose 13.6 percent over the same quarter of 1993, to a 4.5 million annual rate.

Sales rose in 44 states and the District of Columbia, ranging from 1.1 percent in Oklahoma to 34.1 percent in New Hampshire. Every region posted gains, including double-digit advances in the Northeast, South and West.

The Realtors said the increased demand helped boost the national median price 3.3 percent over the period, to $110,600. The median is the midpoint, meaning half of the homes cost more and half cost less.

Robert H. Elrod, the Realtors' president, said that despite higher mortgage rates, financing remained sufficiently affordable to attract buyers.

"Many people, including first-time and trade-up buyers who had waited to buy, made their purchases, decided to go ahead rather than risk further rate increases," he explained.

Thirty-year, fixed-rate mortgages averaged 8.45 percent during the April-June quarter, up from 7.30 percent in the first quarter, according to the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. Rates ranged in the double-digits during much of the 1980s.

The Realtors survey found the price increases to be moderate in many areas, although there were occasional spikes in some markets.

Homeowners in Salt Lake City, for instance, saw the median price of their homes jump 16.7 percent, to $95,600. The median price in Madison, Wis., shot up 15.1 percent, to $115,100.

On the other hand, the median price fell 8.1 percent in Topeka, Kan., to $63,500, and 7.7 percent in Trenton, N.J., to $129,800.

Honolulu had the most expensive homes, with a median price of $365,000, up 1.8 percent from a year earlier. The Waterloo-Cedar Falls area of Iowa had the least expensive, $51,700, a 3.1 percent increase.

The survey covered median prices for single-family detached and attached existing homes in 135 metropolitan statistical areas.

The Realtors found that prices in the Midwest continued a steady pattern of moderate increases, boosting the median price 2.7 percent from a year earlier, to $88,000. It said the region had the largest concentration of affordable homes.

The South, another area with a large supply of affordable housing, experienced a 3.3 percent median price increase, to $98,100. The median price rose 4.1 percent in the West, to $148,100.

But the Northeast, which has been slow to recover from the recession, posted a 1.7 percent drop in the median price, to $139,700. Still, some areas registered moderate increases, including 3.2 percent advances in Boston, to $181,300, and in Rochester, N.Y., to $86,500.

Abandoned buildings cut prices 30.7 percent, trash in the neighborhood 14.5 percent and bad roads nearby, 6.5 percent.

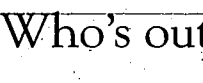

The NAHB's list stops there, but obviously there's more to it than that. Other studies, some by the NAHB, show that the quality of schools, houses of worship, and the level of taxes have sizeable impacts on market prices.

While all factors aren't within the control of individuals, some are, so it's worth remembering: Rising interest rates needn't ruin prices and plans. There's a lot you can do to offset them.

American Stores to sell grocers

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Wednesday, American Stores Co. is selling its 33 Star Market grocery outlets to an international investment group for $285 million in cash and assumption of Star Market's outstanding liabilities. The transaction with the group, formerly the principal investment bank INVEST-CORP, should be closed by early next month, American Stores president Victor Lund said.

American Stores' Star Market division has its headquarters in Cambridge, Mass. The division reports annual revenues of about $840 million.

"The net cash proceeds from the sale initially reduce debt and, over the long run, will be redeployed to our remaining businesses," Lund said.

American Stores operates 1,686 outlets in 27 states.

Wall Street wilts ahead of economic data

NEW YORK — Skidding automotive stocks and lackluster buying ahead of an important economic data release kept the market flat Thursday, with the market closing lower.

Investment downgrades felled issues for the Big Three automakers early, setting the trend for the session. Selling interest died toward the close after bond prices slipped on renewed fears that the Federal Reserve Board may raise interest rates again.

Investors saw no reason to buy after government officials said today that could move the market.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which reached its highest level since mid-June earlier this week, ended mid-June unchanged at 3769.80.

Losses outnumbered gainers by 4 to 3 on the New York Stock Exchange, with 1,191 down, 910 up and 740 unchanged. Volume on the Big Board's floor came to 289.15 million shares as of 2 p.m. MDT compared to 282.38 million shares Wednesday.

Concerns about what the Labor Department's employment report would suggest about economic growth persuaded many investors to sit on the sidelines Thursday. Most analysts expect the number of new jobs created last month to be around 215,000, significantly lower than June's 250,000 and indicating that the economy has slowed down a bit and inflation is under control.

Some of the reports of one official's comments about a tight labor market spooked bond traders, and the price of the key 30-year Treasury bond sagged 4 points.

Analysts say the Fed heightened anxiety among equity investors who have been optimistic all week that a series of recent statistics portending moder-

Utilities commission OKs nation's 1st incentive rate plan

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Over consumer objections, the state Public Utilities Commission on Wednesday approved plans to make San Diego Gas & Electric Co. the nation's first energy utility to base rates on performance rather than costs.

The five-year plan allows rates to rise or fall annually, depending on how well the utility manages its costs and customer growth. It offers SDG&E stockholders greater profits if the company meets certain goals in safety, reliability, customer satisfaction and rate-cutting.

For the utility's 1.2 million customers in San Diego County and southern Orange County, the plan is the comfort level of knowing that the company need not an incentive to provide service at reasonable costs and the most reliable service available," said SDG&E spokesman David Kusumoto.

But Michael Shames, a spokesman for the San Diego-based U.S. Network, said SDG&E's plan would raise rates above the national average and lowered meaningfully by the PUC "should have kept that performance-based plan in place for the reduction of rates," he said. "It's a slippery slope to the idea of it."

Shames said his group's rates will continue to rise for "earning stockholders" equity.

"The commissions in traditionally set gas and electric rates can recover their construction costs and a

As part of an overall effort to reduce regulation, the commission has experimented with some performance-based rates.

One controversial decision based rates for Pacific Gas & Electric Co.'s Diablo Canyon nuclear plant on electricity output rather than reasonable construction costs. Rates for major telephone companies have been based on performance for the first time.

The SDG&E plan, approved unanimously by the five-member commission, is the first for an entire energy utility.

Good performance by the company could mean rewards of up to $19 million or penalties of up to $21 million for stockholders. Initial savings would go to stockholders, but half of any additional savings would be used for rate reduction.

Employers increasingly snoop on workers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Employers in industrialized countries are increasingly using computers and listening devices to spy on workers, with Americans facing the greatest loss of privacy, the International Labor Organization said Monday.

As many as 80 percent of employees in telecommunications, insurance and banking in the U.S. are subject to telephone or computer-based snooping by their employers, the group said.

The ILO report said that the 19 countries surveyed had experienced an increase in surveillance.

The U.S. survey, which included 301 companies, estimated that 20 million Americans — one sixth of the work force — may be subject to some form of electronic monitoring.

The figure does not include those using telephone. "Anyone using a telephone at work is potentially subject to monitoring," the report stressed.

The ILO is an agency of the United Nations, based in Geneva, Switzerland. It includes representatives of governments, labor and business.

Technological advances have made it possible for employers to gain insight into almost every aspect of a worker's activities on the job, the organization said.

"It doesn't matter whether you work in a factory, in an office or as a highly paid engineer or professional — you are very likely under observation ... by computers or machines controlled by your boss,"

"It doesn't matter whether you work in a factory, in an office or as a highly paid engineer or professional — you are very likely under observation ... by computers or machines controlled by your boss."

— Michelle Jankanish, co-author of labor organization report

Michelle Jankanish, co-author of the report, said the ILO expressed particular concern about employer access to electronic mail, which it said was having dramatic growth.

Bills pending in Congress would prohibit secret and intrusive surveillance and regulate how any monitoring could be carried out.

But a spokesman for the National Association of Manufacturers described efforts at any sort of legislation as "overblown."

"We are strongly opposed to the legislation in Congress," said Lawrence Fineran. "We believe, however, that all employers should be notified (if they are being monitored) and made to understand how that information will be used in their evaluation."

The ILO said employers in all countries defended monitoring by citing the need to ensure safety standards at the workplace, quality of service, controlling the functioning of new machines, watching work flow and investigating thefts.

But the group said "the chemistry of intrusion" yields few practical benefits for employers, and may even contribute to a fall in productivity.

Spying on employees was a major contributor to increasing stress in the workplace, the report said. Monitored workers reported "boredom, high tension, extreme anxiety, and depression, anger and severe fatigue," which adversely affected their performance on the job.

"If monitoring is done in a humane fashion, which includes the guarantee of employee access to all information gathered through monitoring, and is used as a motivator rather than a club by supervisors, there could be a positive future for electronic monitoring," the report said.

The ILO is developing international guidelines on workplace privacy. In November, its governing body will consider whether there is a need for an international agreement on the matter.

Thiokol earnings for fiscal year dip 5% from '93

CORDE, Utah (AP) — Thiokol Corp. reports that income for the fiscal year ending June 30 dipped to $60.3 million and $3.02 per share, down 5 percent from earnings for the prior year.

The Utah aerospace company made $63.8 million, or $3.13 per share, in 1993.

The just-completed fiscal year's decrease was blamed primarily on lower defense sales. Also a factor was higher income for 1993 propulsion systems due to the nonrecurring recovery of $13 million in government reimbursement of tax-related expenses from prior years.

Thiokol President James Wilson also reported Wednesday that income for the year was bolstered by receipt of $10.5 million in interest from income tax refunds, higher fastening systems and other nonrecurring expenses.

A one-time, after-tax charge of $63.8 million, or $3.20 per share, reflected liabilities recognized as a result of accounting changes adopted a year ago, company officials said.

Sales for the year reached nearly $1,044 billion, down 13 percent from almost $1,202 billion in 1993.

Propulsion system sales of $868.2 million decreased 17 percent, primarily due to completion of Peacekeeper missile motor deliveries in the first quarter. Lower operating levels at government-owned, contractor-operated ammunition plants also were a factor.

Net income for the fourth quarter leveled off at $16.1 million, or 84 cents per share, down 21 percent. Sales for the quarter were $279.4 million compared to $327.3 million in 1993.

Still, Wilson said the company was "very pleased with our results for the year, especially considering the continuing reductions in defense programs."

"Our space shuttle motor program remained strong and increased income from fastening systems helped to offset the reductions in defense programs," he said. "We expect these trends to continue into the coming year."

THE ACES ON BRIDGE® Bobby Wolff
"Do not speak of secret matters in a field that is full of little hills."
—Hebrew proverb.
Today's hand was played in a recent team game. One declarer tried to blast his way and failed when East signaled accurately. Peggy Sutherland in Dallas had a more devious plan. She made it impossible for East to signal in time to help West.
At the first table, dummy's spade 10 won and South tried the club king, hoping West would duck to isolate the suit. No such luck. East signaled with his six (high-low shows an even number) and West had no problems. West read East's six as a singleton, a doubleton or second highest of four. Since West could not isolate the clubs if East held a singleton or doubleton club, he played East for four clubs and took his ace immediately to clear the spades. When West took his diamond ace, the game went down two.
Had South started diamonds first, he would have salvaged a trick, but the game would still have failed. How did Peggy make the game?

Peggy overtook dummy's spade 10 with her jack and led East. Not having the benefit of a distributional signal from East, West ducked his ace, fearing that South held two clubs. Dummy won; Peggy shifted quickly to diamonds and instead of one or two down, Peggy made her game.
Whenever possible, it pays to hide your distributional secrets from the enemy.

Fox suits up to air football

By Pete Buccia
TV Data

The game of football may not change, but Fox hopes to bring a "new attitude" to NFL coverage.

"I think television needed a change," Fox analyst John Madden says. "I think the NFL needed a change."

That change, he adds, will not mean a change in its style of game analysis, teaming up for Fox with former CBS partner Pat Summerall.

"You have to be yourself," Madden says. "Any audience knows that when you start to be someone else, you're a phony."

Madden says he is more excited about the start of this season than any other in his broadcasting career.

"And the one thing that I have been really impressed with has been the tremendous in situ of willingness to try new things and an enthusiasm," he says.

Total emphasis on football, rather than several sports, is the key to Fox's success in covering the sport, Madden says.

"Complete dedication - that's the thing," he says. "I enjoyed my time at CBS... but CBS Sports got a lot of things that ran into each other."

"We used to start off in the preseason, and Pat Summerall... was doing golf. And then, after that, he'd do U.S. Open Tennis, and we would do three preseason games and two regular season games without working together."

Madden adds, "We shouldn't even have the 's' on the end of 'Sports' yet. It ought to be 'Fox Sport,' and you know, I hope we don't work our way too fast to get to get to be 'Fox Sports' because I sure as hell like it as 'Fox Sport.'"

Fox kicks off its NFL odyssey Friday, Aug. 12, in San Francisco, with a preseason matchup of the Denver Broncos and the 49ers.

DeGeneres's success leads to namesake title

By Lynn Elber
The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — If there were any doubts about who the star was in "These Friends of Mine," ABC is putting them to rest.

Starting this month, the sitcom is in a new time slot with the title "Ellen," for Ellen DeGeneres, the stand-up comedian around whom it's shaped.

"ABC decided it was going to be a good book to have 'Roseanne' and 'Ellen' versus 'Roseanne' and 'These Friends of Mine,'" DeGeneres says.

Besides, she said, the old name was no wordbeater.

The series, which came in as a midseason replacement and scored well in the ratings, has moved from Wednesday nights to 8:30 p.m. MDT Tuesday, following "Roseanne."

Some unaired episodes from the 1993-94 season will be shown this month, including "The Refrigerator" on Wednesday and "The Soft Touch" on Aug. 16. Repeats also will be shown before "Ellen" makes its fall season debut.

Despite the show's success, viewers will see more than a name change in the coming season.

Holly Fulger, who played Ellen Morgan's high school pal Holly, will not be back. Ellen's platonic roommate Adam (Arye Gross) will return and actress Jocely Fisher — the daughter of Eddie Fisher and Connie Stevens — is joining the cast.

DeGeneres' character, a thirty-something woman coping with single life, also goes through changes including her elevation from bookstore-cafe manager to owner.

"The show has really shifted from an ensemble show to a show that really centers around a star and a character," says David Rosenthal, executive producer.

The new approach reflects new stewardship. Carol Black and Neal Marzens (creators of "The Wonder Years"), developed "These Friends of Mine" with Rosenthal but left the series. Rosenthal and Warren Bell are now in charge.

But if "Friends" wasn't broke, given the ratings, why fix it?

"Well, that's what I used to ask about Tide," DeGeneres jokes. "Because I thought it worked just fine on clothes. Why mess with it? I had the same questions. But you know, there's always room for improvement."

Q: Is Dionne Warwick fleeing the country to duck unfavorable publicity about some of her business dealings? — V.H.

A: In addition to a still-thriving vocal career, Dionne has gotten involved in a number of business ventures. She came under some media scrutiny—for a psychic phone hot line venture and for a charity concert she gave that made little money for the charity. Warwick won't discuss either venture. She does talk about a recent stay in Brazil to record a Latin-flavored album. She was so impressed that the 52-year-old singer bought a house in Rio de Janeiro and plans to move there at the end of this year. There are plenty of incentives. Dionne says she plans to star in her own multi-city show in Brazil, plus work on a deal for her interior design company to manufacture furniture for hotels there. She plans to keep her Beverly Hills home, so Dionne Warwick fans will continue to get regular infusions of her singing back here at home.

Q: We were fascinated with your items about what a stage mother, or rather stage father, cute Macaulay Culkin's dad turned out to be when the young actor got famous. Is Kit Culkin still busy throwing his weight around? — S.I.

A: It looks as though Macaulay's ever-present manager/dad, has lost some of his clout in Hollywood. Mac's latest film, "Getting Even With Dad," was a major box-office disappointment for MGM, and the studio is said to be having second thoughts about starting "Mr. and Mrs. Seventh Grade," in which Mac is to star.

Q: What's this about Arnold Schwarzenegger playing a pregnant woman in his next movie? — B.I.

Schwarzenegger

following "True Lies," with Danny DeVito. As you might expect with this cast — they teamed beautifully once before in "Twins" six years ago — the new movie is a comedy. And anything goes. The two play gynecologists who stumble upon a fertility wonder drug, which Schwarzenegger tries. It works, at least in the movie. Yes, expect to see Arnold "pregnant." More than that I cannot tell, except to say that at one point Schwarzenegger's character winds up in a delivery room. It all seems calculated to deliver lots of laughs.

Q: Can you explain how come popular Tim Allen, star of TV's highest-rated show, "Home Improvement," wasn't among those nominated for an Emmy Award this year? — L.D.

A: It seems Allen's representatives dropped the ball and missed the deadline to submit his name for Emmy voting. No amount of appealing to the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences could resolve the situation. Other cast members and the show itself were eligible, and Pamela Richardson even earned a Best Actress nomination. The awards will be presented Sept. 11.

Q: Is Julia Iglesias' reputation as a self-absorbed entertainer justified? He does seem humorless at times. — C.G.

A: Julio's rap as an ego-tripping star seems unjustified. My London spy told me about a woman employed by a big music company who was sent to deliver a package to a country home. When she rang the doorbell at the estate, Sting opened the door and then invited the lady inside for tea. While recovering from that surprise, the woman discovered Julio Iglesias seated by the tea table. He waved for her to pull up a chair and join the party. "Both were charming," she said. "Julio didn't take himself at all seriously, despite the fact that the years haven't been too kind to him and he looked rather old up close. Sting was very shy and quiet, but later took me upstairs to meet his wife, Trudy, and their children. What an assignment!"

Q: What's this about Elizabeth Taylor pushing a line of cheap merchandise on one of those TV shopping channels? How can such a classy woman even consider such a thing? — A.R.

A: As Elizabeth herself puts it, "We're all such hustlers." Actually, she says she's only considering appearances on a leading shopping channel to promote her line of fragrances and other goods. It's not yet a fait accompli. At the moment, Elizabeth, 62, is concentrating on her recovery from hip surgery in March. She gets around in a wheelchair and feels a lot of discomfort, but still manages to look her usual beautiful self. Although she's been offered roles in TV series, she says she isn't keen on the idea. But she'd like to get back to work — perhaps on a shopping channel.

Q: Someone told me my favorite star, JoBeth Williams, has caught the directing bug, like many actresses are doing these days. What is she directing? — G.K.

A: Williams' efforts can be seen on Showtime's upcoming "On Hope," which stars Academy Award-winner Mercedes Ruehl and Amelia G. Fother. So creatively challenging and satisfying was the experience, according to Williams, she's exploring other directing opportunities.

Q: None of us cared much for the recent movie "I Love Trouble," but since Nick Nolte and Julia Roberts are such terrific stars, we're hoping they might do a sequel, which might be better. What are the chances? — H.T.

A: Highly unlikely. It would take a fortune and a lot of pleading to get those two together again. Insider say it wasn't a happy pairing. In fact, word is that we may never see them starring in the same film again.

Informal survey argues Nielsen

How many times have you heard people say they don't understand the Nielsen ratings? The show they watch never seems to be the top-rated one, and yet they swear that everyone they know watches the same low-rated show.

Soap studies

John N. Goudas

Well, when it comes to the soaps, daytime drama fans are even more vocal about this ratings dilemma. For hundreds of weeks now, the top-rated daytime soap has been "The Young and the Restless." However, in a totally informal survey I conducted, the No. 1 show was "All My Children" by a landslide and everyone's favorite character was Erica Kane (Susan Lucci).

First, let me explain about the informality of my survey. I had many of my friends who are school teachers take a poll among their students—many of whom are avid soap watchers, particularly the young girls. I also enlisted the aid of other friends and some my relatives to take a survey among their co-workers. I asked people on trains, buses and in the streets of New York City if they watched soaps and, to my delightful surprise, many indicated their VCRs were on at the very moment we were speaking, for they were taping their favorite shows.

Then I asked a few of my colleagues, who write columns about soaps and other aspects of TV and threw their opinions into the mix.

Remember, I did say this was a totally informal survey, and herewith are the results.

Favorite Soap Operas:

- 1) "All My Children"; 2) "General Hospital"; 3) "As the World Turns"; 4) "The Young and the Restless"; 5) "Days of Our Lives."
- 6) "The Bold and the Beautiful"; 7) "One Life to Live"; 8) "Guiding Light"; 9) "Another World"; 10) "Loving."

Favorite Characters:

1. Erica Kane (Susan Lucci) on "All My Children";

Celebrity gossip

Q: Now that the House of Blues has opened in Los Angeles and seems to have become the place to go, are there any other hot new restaurants for visitors that we will be seeing later this year? — T.E.

A: Celebrity investors —

including Steven Seagal, Marty Ingels and the attorney of the moment, Robert Shapiro (who is representing O.J. Simpson) — have put their money behind former Spago maitre d' Bernard Epicum to open Eclipse. At the moment, it has all the ingredients for success.

Q: What's this about Elizabeth Taylor pushing a line of cheap merchandise on one of those TV shopping channels? How can such a classy woman even consider such a thing? — A.R.

A: As Elizabeth herself

puts it, "We're all such hustlers. Actually, she says she's only considering appearances on a leading shopping channel to promote her line of fragrances and other goods. It's not yet a fait accompli. At the moment, Elizabeth, 62, is concentrating on her recovery from hip surgery in March. She gets around in a wheelchair and feels a lot of discomfort, but still manages to look her usual beautiful self. Although she's been offered roles in TV series, she says she isn't keen on the idea. But she'd like to get back to work — perhaps on a shopping channel.
